IDF: PA behind Bethlehem demos

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN

IDF soldiers firing rubber bullets reportedly wounded seven Arabs, including a Palestinian policeman who tried to open fire at Israelis, during protests at Rachel's Tomb in Bethlehem yesterday.

IDF commanders in Bethlehem accused the Palestinian Authority of failing to act against the stonethrowers. Lt.-Col. Eitan, a deputy brigade commander, accused the PA of encouraging youths to riot. We are trying to calm the situation and are speaking with people in the PA in order to prevent violence, but we don't have any other choice except to use riot gear to disperse demonstrators," Eitan told reporters. At first the soldiers fired tear gas to try to quell the demonstrations. Some of the gas wafted into the nearby Bethlehem Elementary Sebool for Girls, and about a dozen Palestinian girls were treated at Beit Jallah Hospital, hospital officials said.

The army said the protesters hurled stones and bottles from the school, which is adjaceot to Rachel's Tomb.

The IDF Spokesman later apologized for hurting "innocent residents" but accused Palestinians of starting the demonstration. Later, soldiers resorted to firing rubber bullets, and a Palestinian policeman was struck in the hand as fellow officers tried to prevent him from shooting at Israeli troops, Army Radio reported.

Eitan confirmed that the Palestinian officer was shot, say-"The IDF is aware that a ing: inian policeman was hit. He wasn't hurt inteotionally but because he was standing among demonstrators.

In all, seven Palestinians were wounded by rubber hullets fired by Israelis, Army Radio said. Other media reported only five wounded.

It was the fourth day of Palestinian demonstrations against the extended blockade of Bethlehem, the only PA-controlled city still under the internal closure imposed after the July 30 Mahaneh Yehuda suicide bombings.

In some cases yesterday, Palestinian Police were seen aiming rifles at IDF troops, but no live bullets were fired by either side.

"We know that the situation in Bethlehem could escalate and come to a situation where live bullets are fired, like last September," Eitan said.

Violence continoed into last night when a number of firebombs were thrown at Israeli troops in Bethlehem and Halboul, causing no injuries or damage, the IDP Spokesman said.

Eitan said that the closure on the Bethlehem area remained strictly for security reasons. Israel reportedly believes that the two masterminds of the Mahaneh Yehuda bombing are hiding in Bethlehem. Chief of General Staff LL-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak yesterday told parliameotary reporters he thought a violent flare-up in the West Bank or Gaza Strip was possihle, but not in the coming days. TOKYO - The Japanese are not against having their funding and expertise harnessed for an Israeli-Jordanian water desalination project, Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu said yesterday, after two days of intensive talks with Japan's political and economic leaders.

"They raised the subject," Netanyahu pointed out, referring to his talks with Japan's defense and trade ministers, as well as to his mitial conversation with his Japanese counterpart, Ryutaro Hashimoto.

"The government of Japan is prepared to allocate funds and knowhow to this end. They asked for a detailed proposal. Had they not wanted to go ahead, they would have said it was difficult or dangerous," said the prime minister. He added that in all his meetings he had stressed that existing and future agreements between Israel, the Palestinians and the neighboring Arab states "could be torpedoed" by disputes over water.

for 'Ashkenazi' colon cancer

By JUDY SIEGEL

An American Jewish researcher has developed a blood test for a type of colon cancer common in Ashkenazi Jews, after finding the defective gene responsible for the disease. News seeped out yesterday of what is being hailed as a major breakthrough in genetic research by Dr. Bert Vogelstein of Johns Hopkins University's Howard Hughes Medical Institute in Baltimore. The results are to be published in the September 1 issue of Nature Genetics.

Experts expect the blood tests to be available here soon.

In a telephone interview from Baltimore, Vogelstein told The Jerusalem Post he felt "privileged to make this contribution, which should benefit many people and save lives."

The genetic defect, present in one out of every 17 healthy Ashkenazi Jews, is believed the most common cancer-related mutation ever identified in an eth-nie group. It is identifiable in one in eight Ashkenazim suffering from colon cancer, and io one in six Ashkenazi colon cancer patients who develop the disease before age 66, Vogelstein said. According to Vogelstein, this is

According to vogestern, this is the first relatively common, pre-ventible illness that has been linked to a genetic mutation. Anyone carrying the gene has a 20% to 30% lifetime risk of contracting colon cancer, he said.

Vogelstein happened on the dis-covery when a friend of colleagues suffering from pre-cancerous colon polyps asked for genetic screening. Since none was available for his illness, he asked to be tested for a mutation that causes another, more rare colon cancer.

"I thought it would be a waste of time, but he insisted that I do it as a favor. I didn't find the mutation for the rare cancer, but I did identify an alteration of the cancercontrolling gene," recalled Vogelstein.

Syria promises peace if Israel pulls out of Lebanon and Golan

By DAVID RUDGE

Syria yesterday called on Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu to withdraw from south Lebanon and the Golan Heights, promising peace with security in return. A special broadcast on Damascus radio pledged that a complete and unconditional pullout by Israel would receive the full support and encouragement of Lebanon and Syria, the Arab world and the international community. In return, according to the broadcaster, Syria and Lebanon were prepared to offer peace, which was known to be the best form of real security.

According to an Israel radio report, the special broadcast, as well as editorials in the Syrian press, were in response to comments made by Netanyahu in Japan which implied that Israel wants to withdraw from south Lebanon but is being prevented from doing so by Damascus. The Syrian radio report main-tained that neither Syria nor Lebanon would present any obstaeles to an Israeli withdrawal from south Lebanon and the Golan Heights. If Netanyahu tried to implement such a move, the only opposition would be from the warmongers in his own government, Damascus radio maintained. The Tishrin national daily stressed, however, that Syria and Lebanon would not surrender to Israeli provocation or attempts to dictate terms.

Meanwhile, there is growing criticism in Lebanon of the Grapes of Wrath monitoring committee. This follows the refusal of the group last week to condemn Israel for South Lebanese Army shelling of Sidon last Monday in which six people were killed and over 30 wounded.

The shelling of Sidon prompted retaliatory Hizbullah Katyusha rocket attacks on the Galilee which the monitoring group condemned, saying it was the responsibility of the Lebanese government to pre-vent Hizbullah from launching

Chief of General Staff Lt-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak told the Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee that Hizbullah is trying to increase its attacks on the IDF and the South Lebanese Army as well as on Lebanese civilians including those north of the security zone.

According to an official briefing, Shahak said there is a new pbenomenon in which Hizbullah is not only oot accepting responsibility for the attacks but is trying to blame them on Israel. Japan-Israel: A

By MIKE JACOBS

TOKYO - Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu told a packed Foreign Correspondent's Club of Japan luncheon yesterday that the future of the Israel's survival was the same as in its ancient past; the ability to ask and answer questions. "We may have a small body," he assured the audience, "but we also have a big head."

Connecting Talmudic skills with the development of post-industrial technology, the prime minister laid down for the world's press a dynamie future linked with the USA and Japan, from whence the world's new milk and honey will flow.

Gone are the days of Zionist ideals for working the land alone, Netanyahu said. Working with the mind is now the greatest source of economic wealth in the modern world." good fortune for Israel. We now have the highest per genes to multiply. The defective genes couldn't manufacture a protein required to keep normal colon cells from multiplying wildly, and they became cancerous

In their research, Vogelstein and his colleagues focussed on a piece of DNA called the APC gene. Scientists have know for six years that mutations in this gene can cause colon cancer. However, Vogelstein found a new genetic variation in the gene called a polymorphism, that also predisposes to cancer. "We always thought polymorphisms were harmless, meaningless variations, just like the word 'color' can be spelled 'colour' as well. But now we know that instead of this polymorphism directly causing tumors to form, it makes the gene unstable and prone to additional damage from carcinogens," he said. He said the discovery could be important for kidney, breast or prostate cancers which may also involve the same polymorphism mechanism. Johns Hopkins has begun to offer Vogelstein's blood test for $200.

The American Society for Clinical Oncology recommends tests only for Ashkenazi Jews with colon cancer or . with first-degree relatives who have had pre-cancerous polyps or the disease, he said.

The Health Ministry said it would consider the issue when it arises.

Prof. Eitan Yefe-Nof, acting director of the Lautenberg Center for Immunology and Cancer Research of the Hebrew University and Hadassah in Jerusalem, said he expects public funds would eventually cover screening costs for those genetically at risk.

If the defective gene is identified in an individual, he should undergo a colonoscopy for signs of any precancerous polyps or a tumor. If ' caught early, the polyps can be pinched off during colonoscopy, but if found at a more advanced stage, surgery is necessary.

Higher rate of diabetes in South

By JUDY SIEGEL

The Health Ministry and health authorities in the Beersheba area were shocked to learn from a recent epidemiological survey that the rate of adult-onset diabetes in the South is twice to three times what it is in the country as a whole.

In addition, the number of foot and leg amputations due to diabetic infections is twice as high in the Beersheba area as in the rest of the country.

Health Minister Yehoshua Matza, who was alerted to the problem this month, has decided to support the establishment in Beersheba of a walk-in, interdisciplinary diabetes center, where all patients may undergo monitoring and treatment. The district health profile of Beersheba - the first of its kind - was written by Prof. Ted Tulchinsky and Dr. Gary Ginsberg, both of the min-istry. Is will be followed by similar regional epidemiological studies in Ramle and Acre.

Tulchinsky said that not enough is known about why southern residents are at such high risk for Type II diabetes, but among the hypotheses are difficult access to medical care, low awareness of diabetes complications, the area's relatively large numbers of Sephardi (and especially Moroccanorigin) Jews, who have a predisposition to the disease, and the influx of untreated immigrants from the former Soviet Union.

The ministry, the health funds, Ben-Gurion University and Soroka Hospital are currently holding meetings on the establishment of the diabetes center, and looking for sources of funding. The full story of diabetes in the outh will be presented on Sunday's Health Page.

The chances that the school year will begin on time improved yesterday when school district directors were informed by Education Minister Director-General Benzion Deli that pupils would enjoy the same number of hours they had before cuts made during the past school year.

However, Secondary School Teachers Association spokeswoman Rivka Kanarek said last night that "not one of the principals we spoke to received any such directive," although she said she had heard of an internal order sent to district heads.

"We have not seen any written document," she said, "and for us, this is nothing different than the promises we got yesterday in the Knesset from Benzion Dell. On a personal level, we believe him, but

Matza blasts irregular PA funding to health services

By JUDY SIEGEL and news agencies

Health Minister Yehoshua Matza last night issued a stinging attack on the Palestinian Authority for serious irregularities discovered in the PA's health institutions, after the PA comptroller found that not all the funds meant for health services were actually reaching these institutions.

"While Israel is falsely accused by the PA of refusing to give Palestinians medical treatment in Israel, the PA itself is guilty of serious irregularities. When money meant for health and saving lives disappear, this is much more serious than some ordinary error," Matza said. "The disappearance of these funds joins the PA's failure to transfer money to Israeb hospitals that treat Palestinians. I fear this will force us to reach serious conclusions in this matter - although we will always be careful to separate politics from the need to protect public health."

The Health Ministry also vehemently denied a claim that Israel is testing drugs on Palestinian prisoners, calling the claim "utter nonsense."

Yasser Abed Rabbo, the Palestinian minister of information, said the Health Ministry has issued 1,000 licenses to pharmaceutical companies "to test dangerous daugs on Palestinian and other Arab prisoners."

He made the claim in a July 24 letter to his counterpart in the United Arab Emirates, Sheikh Abdullah bin Zayed AJ Nahyan, which was released to the press yesterday.

"The story is utter nonsense," ministry spokesman Yair Amikam said. "Not only do we not conduct experiments on Palestinian prisoners, we do not conduct experiments on prisoners at all."

A ministry spokesman said that this year, the school day will be lengthened in poorer neighborhoods and in confrontation line lowns with populations of less than 10,000. Pupils in these areas will go to school for 41 hours a week.

Education Minister Zevulun Hammer praised the new arrangement, and said that in implementing it, all barriers to the opening of the school year on time had been removed. Hammer said efforts should be made to crase the bad feelings that emerged during the struggle over the long school day, so that they do not overshadow the happiness involved in the return of some 1.5 million pupils to school.

long school day's implementation Zvilli revives Peres-forpresident plan

By SARAH HONIG

Labor's former secretary-general Nissim Zvilli yestenday tabled another proposal to elect ex-party leader Shimon Peres to the custom-made office of party pres-ident. The proposal is to be deliberated at Labor's convention in September.

Peres dissociated himself from Zvilli's move, but many in the party believe he was involved in reviving the idea.

Zvilli first proposed his idea before the election of Edud Barak as party chairman three months ago. At the time, Barak vehemently opposed the move, pronouncing it an attempt by Peres to cement his hold on the party. The party convention last April sided with Barak, and a humiliated Peres announced that he would not seek the office again.

Yesterday, Peres issued a formal statement reiterating his refusal to accept the heretofore non-existent post. He said he was not interested in it, and will not stand in September.

Zvilli maintained last night that he alone was behind the new proposal, but Labor pundits note that Peres met with Zvilli for a lengthy teto-a-tete yesterday, immediately prior to Zvilli's announcement that he was again tabling his proposal.

This has led many Labor insiders to suspect that while Peres was going on the record as declining the nomination, he was in effect endorsing, if not actually initiating the move.

sands of yeshiva students. The allegations against several haredi bodies accused of receiving funds from the Jerusalem municipality and education ministry for students registered in more than one yeshiva, does not surprise Yosef Lapid of Ma'ariv. Lapid writes that the real robbery of bundreds of millions of shekels of tax payers' money is committed not by fraud, but by legal allocations made to haredi institutions. He says this is because some yeshivas teach students to evade military service, not to work and to eschew the state's values.

"The great robbery of state funds takes place on the basis of coalition agreements, with the knowledge of both left and right wing leaders. No wonder haredi circles regard the secular public that finances them as 'a stupid goy," " Lapid says.

The Israeli justice system sent out two clear messages this week, writes Ran Kislev of Ha'aretz, who criticizes the double standard used in treating Arabs who hurt Jews and vice versa.

The first message was in the case of soldier Noam Friedman wbo was charged by a military tribunal of shooting and wounding five Palestinians in Hebron. Anyone convicted of these charges could be sentenced to 20 years' imprison-

Ministry of immigrant Absorption 密

Submission of Requests for an Allocation from 1997 Legacies Further to the notice of the Public Committee on Utilizing Bequests to the State:

Public institutions (as defined in Principles of the Budget Law 1985) are invited to submit requests to the Ministry of Immigrant Absorption, for an allocation from funds derived from bequests.

For 1997/8, the Ministry has decided on the following priorities; employment, education and educational enrichment, culture and tradition, welfare, science, artisans and sportsmen/women, and special sections of the population.

Institutions that make requests should detail their activities, connected with immigrant absorption. Requests, which should be submitted by September 30, 1997, should be sent only to the Coordinator of the Jerusalem Committee, only by registered mail or personal delivery, to 2 Rehov Kaplan, Government Compound, Jerusalem (Tel. 02-675-2772).

A complete copy of the request should also be submitted to the Public Committee on Utilizing Bequests to the State (17 Rehov Kaplan, Tel Aviv 64734).

Requests arriving at the Ministry after the above date will not be considered.

Institutions that wish to obtain coples of the request forms and further particulars should apply to the Coordinators of the Committee - at the Head Office of the Ministry, and at district offices, and bureau heads of the Ministry of Immigrant Absorption.

Requests must be submitted, in accordance with the established rules, as promulgated in Yalkut Hapirsumim No. 3162 of February 21, 1985, in Yaikut Hapirsumim No. 3800 of September 19, 1990, and in Yalkut Hapirsumim No. 3986 of March 26, 1992, and so as to suit the procedures of the Committee, as published in Yalkut Hapirsumim No. 4335 of September 21, 1995, and the amendments to the rules, as published in Yalkut Hapirsumim No. 4392 of March 17, 1996.

THE CAIRO GENIZA SEMINAR

In 1896 at the Ben Ezra Synagogue in the Fustat area of old Cairo, Prof. Solomon Schechter of Cambridge University revealed to the world the staggering contents of its Geniza. 140,000 fragments were given to the Cambridge University for study. In the whole history of Judaic studies there has never been a more dramatic event than the discovery of these ancient documents. Poetry, prayers, accounts of journeys, files, tens of thousands of handwritten documents, some signed by the Rambam himself, and much more. A hundred years have passed and still not all the material has been studied. Now a selection on loan from Cambridge is on view in Jerusalem. It presents a vivid picture of the spiritual - and not so spiritual - mores and business dealings of a medieval Jewish community.

Shorashim and The Jerusalem Post Travel Club invite you to a weekend seminar with the experts, Prof. Stefan Reif, Head of the Cairo Archive, Cambridge University, and Prof. Mordechai Akiva Friedman, Jewish Culture in Moslem Lands and Cairo Geniza Studies, Tel Aviv University.

NEWS

'All I can do is sit, wait and hope'

By ALLISON KAPLAN SOMMER

Naomi Gavrash was red-eyed and exhausted yesterday. The 69-year-old Jerusalemite couldn't sleep a wink after watching the reunion of mother Margalit Amosi and daughter Tsila Levine on the evening news. All she could think of was the baby boy that was taken from her in 1949.

"All I can do is sit and wait and hope that I should be so lucky as to find my child the way Margalit Amosi did," she said, her voice cracking. "I've done everything I can to find him. I've been to all the meetings and committees, I've done radio and television interviews, but mostly I wait and I wait. I'm happy for Margalit, but sad for myself. I want to see my son."

The Amosi-Levine reunion, and the fact that DNA tests have provided a firm basis for the claim that Yemenite babies labeled as missing or deceased in the 1940s and 50s were in fact put up for adoption, has reignited the hopes of elderly women like Gavrash. It is also likely to bring pressure for further government investigation into the disappearances. Amosi and Levine are scheduled to testify today before a special government committee on the issue, which has served as a rallying point for the followers of the controversial self- take our babies from us." styled rabbi Uzi Meshulam, who is currently in prison.

Gavrash's story is one of the more dramatic of the tales. She says that when she was at a camp for new immigrants in Haifa, she went to the building were the babies were being cared for in order to nurse her three-month-old son. While she was there, she noticed people taking several babies away, and asked where they were going. Communicating with the staff was difficult since she spoke neither Hebrew nor Yiddish, but a woman finally told her in Arabic that they were being taken for "examinations" to Be'er Ya'acov for a week or two. They asked for her baby as well, she recounts, but she refused. "So one of the men held back both of my arms and they took my baby away from me," she says. "They drove away and I ran after them crying and screaming.

"Afterwards, I went to this place every day for nine months to find out where he was. They kept telling me he was in different hospitals, but neither I nor any of the other mothers could travel to any of them because we had no money. We were just told not to worry, that this was the Land of Israel, that nobody here would Gavrash claims that she was never told that her baby died, or even that he was missing, and that to this day she has never gotten an official explanation of his fate.

Naomi Sharabi, manager of the Ezrat Avot geriatric day care center which Gavrash attends, said she first learned of the elderly woman's story when "I noticed that she always sat with her arms held in a peculiar position, as if nursing a baby." When she asked Gavrash why, "she told me in tears that she couldn't help it, that she can't stop reliving the moment they stole her baby. For her, something in life will always be missing until she finds out what happened."

Sharabi says that she has heard several similar stories among her geriatric patients, in the tightly-knit Yemenite community - and within her own family. "My sister was almost taken from my mother as a baby. She learned that they were about to take the babies away to 'the hospital,' and my grandmother bravely suggested that they kidnap my sister from the nursery in order to prevent her being taken. So my mother sat with a blanket on her as if she were nursing, while my grandmother took off with the baby and got on a bus. I shudder to think that if they hadn't taken this step, my sister could have been one saying someone chopped off their own finger and just left it some-where. We're talking about people's of the missing children." Sharabi says that it is "infuriating" that even after the Amosi discovery, missing children - anyone who watched Margalit Amosi reunite with some people still question the veracity of the stories. her daughter can see it is important. "Even on the radio this morning," Talking that way is like rubbing salt

she said, "a man claimed that the in the wounds of the mothers like children were not taken, that their Naomi Gavrash, who are still waiting to meet their children." mothers simply abandoned them.

Levine, Amos, visit home

Tsila Levine, reunited recently with her birth mother, Margalit Amosi, yesterday visited the children's house in Rosh Ha'ayin that her mother was told she disappeared from 49 years ago.

Amosi, who accompanied Levine, recalled the last time she saw her daughter before her disappearance.

"Here, in the evening, I fed her, like every day. The nurse took her from me, and the next morning when I came, as usual, they wouldn't let me see her. I asked the nurse, who knew me, what's with my daugh-ter, but she kept saying that she didn't know."

She wouldn't find out for almost five decades that Levine was adopted by the Rosen family on Kibbutz Ein Hamifratz.

When Levine started to cry during yesterday's visit, Amosi told her. "Enough crying. Now we will be happy and laugh together. I have spent my whole life crying, 50 years. Now I am calm. Be calm like me.

Attorney Rami Tsubari, who belped Levine locate her mother, told Army Radio that since the reunion was made public 50 families had contacted him with similar stories, asking for help. (Itim)

Local radio growing in popularity

Wednesday, August 27, 1997 The Jerusalem Post

A survey by the Advertisers Association released yesterday showed local radio stations growing in popularity, and the ledior Aharonor daily maintaining its position as the nation's most widely read newspaper.

The poll was conducted last April and May of 1,500 people, representing 2.3 million Israelis. not including haredim, Arabs and children under 13. Prof. Avi Degani, scientific director of Geocartographica. which did the survey, said that 14 percent of those questioned listened to local stations, up from 8.9% a year ago. He found that local radio was reaching 30,000 to 60,000 listeners nationwide, a number which Degani feels makes the stadons marketable to advertisers.

Degani believes the main loser to these stations is Israel Radio's rock music channel, Reshet Gimmel. whose listeners dropped from 19.8% of the population a year ago to only 8.2% this year. Reshet Bet. with its program of news and talk shows, is heard by 25% of the population.

The survey showed that lediot

Abaronot continues to lead the other newspapers with a readership of 48%, as compared to 18.8% for Ma'uriv, and only 7.1% for Ha arct.

On the weekends, readership of the dailies rises to 63% for Tedlor Aharonot, 24.8% for Ma'ariv, and 7.3 5 for Habaretz.

Degani also noted that ironically, as the number of news media increase, the number of Israelis who use them seems to shrink.

A separate survey conducted for the Israel Broadcasting Authority, showed that 54% of Israelis watch the weekly Populinka program on Channel 1. It found that 304watch the show regularly and another 16% watch it once or twice a month.

The survey was conducted by the Konso Shiluy Company during the first week of August. A random sample of 1,008 people aged 1S and over were questioned.

Meni Pe'er's show As Meni's was reported to be watched by 38,55 of Israelis, Sixteen percent watch it every week while another 15% watch it once or twice a month, the survey shawed, (ltim)

Ministry

By JUDY SIEGEL

People at high risk for complications of influenza are urged to get vaccinated against it no later than the end of November, the Health Ministry announced yesterday.

The high-risk population includes children aged six months and over and adults who suffer from chronic illnesses; all those over the age of 65; medical teams who treat high-risk patients; tourists planning to visit tropical countries and all travelers who will go to the southern hemisphere from April through September 1998.

The ministry has stipulated the strains of flu viruses that will be common this winter. A/Wuhan, A/Bayem and B/Beijing. The vaccine must be suited to the virus strains known to attack in the 1997/8 season. One may get a flu shot along with a vaccination against any other disease. Reactions to the shot are rare. One should not get a flu shot if one has fever. People who are allergic to egg albumen should consult with their doctor before getting the shot. Kupat Holim Clalit has begun sending out half a million postcards inviting members at high risk for influenza to come in for free vaccinations. Its campaign, unprecedented in size, begins in September. Only a few years ago, the health funds were stingy in their provision of free flu shots, but it has become clear that preventing the elderly and chronically ill from coming down with the flu saves many millions of shekels that would otherwise he spent treating complications requiring hospitalization. Clalit director-general Dr. Yitzhak Peterburg called on the other health funds to follow its example and provide free vaccinations to members who are at high risk

By LIAT COLLINS

The head of the Ramat Hovav Industrial Zone Council, David Milgrom, yesterday attacked Environment Minister Raphael Eitan, accusing him of giving journalists partial and unchecked information during a tour of the zone earlier this week.

Milgrom stressed that the council is committed to protecting the environment despite the difficult conditions. F.W. de Klerk leaves politics

CAPE TOWN (Reuters) - South African opposition leader F.W. de Klerk retired at 61 yesterday to help his National Party shrug off its apartheid baggage.

Political analysts said, however, that the process would be hampered by the lack of a credible black leader to step into his shoes. De Klerk, telling a news conference of his decision to step down effective September 9, said that because of more than 10 years of service in apartheid-era cabinets, his opponents had made him a symbol of "a guilt-laden past."

"That symbol is removed now," he said. During his eight-and-a-half years as leader of the party, de Klerk presided over its efforts to expand support beyond the previous whites-only electorate, and succeeded in wooing a majority of the country's Coloureds --- people of mixed-race descent. Yesterday he said 15 percent of blacks also supported the National Party, but independent political analysis say that in its pre-

But the reckoning is there really isn't anybody who is of the stature, which they must profoundly regret."

Most speculation about a successor has focused on conservative Hernus Kriel, premier of Western Cape province where the party has majority support, and Marthinus van Schalkwyk, a relatively young MP regarded as a progressive.

Welsh said the race to succeed de Klerk was wide open hut van Schalkwyk, who entered parliament in 1987, had not been as tarnished as some other party leaders hy the moguls of The the International Monctary Fund were in Nairobi yesterday, but the economic pundits of Embakasi slum were more interested in scooping up the frec toxic maize the government had sent them.

Out of the patchwork shanties they scramhled in the heat of the Kenyan summer - old men, women and children, clutching sacks and plastic bags to gather the poison grain.

The toxic maize was damped in the hleak quarry over the weekend from five trucks, accompanied by police officers and officials of "a quality-con-trol organization."

They had promised that the stuff would be completely destroyed. After all, it's a health hazard.

The sacks of grain were splashed with gasoline and set ablaze, hnt the fire quickly fizzied out. It may be poison, hil a gift horse from the government is not to be looked at too closely in the mouth.

Crunch time

Daniel arap Moi, Kenyalla's successor, fus the mold. He has ruled since 1978 - another "president for life" no one wants any more. During his rule over what could be an immensely rich and successful country. Moi has hit the headlines only for endless harassment of political oppo-nents and anti-democratic consolidation of his personal pow-CIS.

Now the crunch has come. The International Monetary Fund froze a $140 million aid package to Kenya on July 31.

This coincided with increasing political violence, hut the IMF cited high-level corruption and plain had government. Hence this week's IMF mission in Nairohi and some hard talking with El Presidento and his senior officials, who of course were totally unaware of any graft until the IMF raised the subject.

The IMF wants the government to come up with some swift answers and sharp policies before opening the till again. After 20 years of steadily worsening corruption and political decay, no one is expecting miracles when Moi meets the rich white men tomorrow.

Killing spree Some Kenyans hoped that the negative effect of violence on tourists on the beaches and in safari parks would conceotrate ministerial minds.

Alas no. The ruling Kanu yesterday boycotted much-heralded talks with an umbrella group that has gathered all reform elements together to try and get some sense past Moi's swishing decoration. Customers said they came for the hargains, not the politics. Nevertheless, several editions of Zhirinovsky's party newspaper were stacked on a table, free for the taking. One featured the headline "Patriotism Is an Effective Way of Uniting the People and State." An article on the back page was about demonstrations against NATO expansion.

His ultranationalist, incendiary statements won him attention and votes, to the horror of both Yelisin and Washington.

- Despite Zhirinovsky's frequent anti-Western outhursts, the store sells numerous foreign goods, including yogurt and cognac. The vodka, however, is Russian, and his personal brand, Zhirinovsky Vodka, takes up most of the space on the vodka shelf. His portrait adoms the label.

Zhirinovsky's is run by a business arm of the party, Bashaglov said. Russian political parties largely are financed privately, often hy business donations, but this is the first known case of a party starting an enterprise on its OWN.

Stories abound of Zhirinovsky's parliamentary faction taking money in return for votes. Most party property is registered in Zhirinovsky's name, making him a real estate magnate, Petrov said. Zhirinovsky's personal political star has been fading. He finished fifth in last year's first round of presidential voting, and polls show that the Russian public puts him far down on the list of potential candidates.

He shows no signs of giving up his trademark pugnacious political style. Zhirinovsky wants to see Alaska, purchased by the United States from Russia in the 19th century, returned to Moscow. He makes fun of opponents' physical features. He said, for instance, that Communist Party leader Gennady Zyuganov ought to have a wart removed from his forchead so as not to frighten vot-ETS.

The US space agency NASA said Monday that Mir's two working oxygen systems --- its Elektron generator and a back-up system of oxygen "candles" - had failed, briefly, leaving the crew with just a few days' supply of bottled oxygen.

Russian Mission Control officials first denied there had been any problem, then played it down yesterday, saying the three-man Russian-American crew solved it within an hour.

"The situation is as follows - the Elektron is working, the system which uses candles is working, and one Elektron which is in Kvant-2 is not working because there was no electricity there," deputy flight director Viktor Blagov told Reuters.

Solovyov said the crew would restore some power today to Kristall and Priroda, two scientific modules off since June.

In preparation, engineer Vinogradov was mopping up mois-ture that had formed in Kristall since it was switched off.

"He's got to dry it up. They're using fans, the ventilation system, heaters, they can also use napkins," said Mission Control spokesman Valery Lyndin.

President Boris Yeltsin said during a visit to Saratov in central Russia that the repairs had revived the ageing Mir.

Coping with calamity

Struck suddenly by a volcano which had been dormant for centuries, inhabitants of the Caribbean island of Montserrat ponder a very uncertain future

By SERGE F. KOVALESKI

PLYMOUTH, Montserrat - In Montserrat's epic battle between man and nature, nature - in the form of the Soufriere Hills volcano - is triumphing, threatening the viability of this onetime paradise in the eastern Caribbean.

Nearly two years of violent eroptions have ravaged large swaths of the island with fastmoving rivers of superheated gas, rocks, ash and boulders the size of boats, destroying bundreds of homes and burying villages. Plymouth, the capital of this Briosh dependency, today looks like a post-apocalyptic min. The country's economy bas effectively been annihilated, as has the farming sector, just when this tiny island was becoming self-sufficient in producing many key crops. Since the volcano awoke in July 1995 after centuries of dormancy, more than half of Montserrar's 12,000 residents have fled to other Caribbean islands, Britain and the United States, while others have been placed in shelters, some of which are in deplorable condition. Two thousand people have aban-doned the island in the last eight weeks alone, following several more devastating emptions. One

cano's first and, so far as is known, only victims - and forced the closing of Montserrat's airport. Over the weekend, the Briosh government began a voluntary evacuation program, ferrying residents by boat to Antigua, about 50 km, northeast of here. Officials said that as many as 600 people have registered to be evacuated and receive financial assistance for relocation, a process that will be carried out over the next few weeks with the support of Britain's Royal Navy.

Observers and government officials here expressed concern about the growing flight from the island, saying it does oot bode well for the future of Montserrat, which needs between 2,000 and 3,000 residents to remain here to be a viable, functioning place to live. Large oumbers of businesses and banks have already been forced to close because of the dearth of customers. At the same ome, most neighboring islands, wrestling with high unemployment and other problems of their own, have made it clear that while they are sympathetic toward the evacuees they do not want to take them in permanently. Many people in Montserrat, however, have relatives in Britain, which has relaxed residency restrictions for the refugees.

The volcano crisis has been unrest and political instability here. Residents have staged sporadic demonstrations, complaining that their living conditions continue to worsen unabated, that the British bave not reacted swiftly enough in helping the island and that the Montserral government has fallen short in securing more geoerous resettlement packages from London. Amid the groundswell of discontent. Montserrai's highest-ranking local official, chief minister Benrand Osborne, resigned last Thursday. "I feel like we are slowly being wiped off the face of the earth," said Jean Beckett, 39, who has been living in a government-operated shelter near Salem with her husband since their home was obliterated by lava a month ago.

"I don't know how in God's name we can rebuild from this. Our capital is gone, livelihoods are gone, no one seems to be doing much about it, and the only sounds you hear that mean anything are the rumblings of that horrible volcano."

In the meantime, scienosts here said that the most likely scenario for Soufriere Hills is that its acuvity not only will continue at current levels but may increase over the long run, belching greater amounts of the combination of superheated gas, ash and rock known as pyroclastic flow.

"There is consensus among all the senior scientists involved that this crisis has now entered a stage for which there is little precedent in other well-documented eruptions, and that there is an urgent need to consider the future outlook and hazard implications in light of the escalating pattern of activity," Montserrat Volcano the Observatory said in a draft report prepared for the Montserrat government. A copy of the report was obtained by The Washington Post.

"The prospect of larger explosive erupoons over the coming weeks and months is significantly increased and the areas with substantial populations in the center of the island are now at much higher risk than before," it concluded.

Government officials said that an estimated two-thirds of the 100-sq.-km. island, including Salem, the provisional capital, has

While most of the devastation

But her husband, William Peters, 60, who like other diehards has decided to weather the turmoil created by the volcano, offered a different perspective: "I am a responsible cuizen and I have interests here. I just can't pick up and go.

"For one thing, I don't think I can get a job anywhere else. I have to remain here and fight, fight the government and the volcano," said Peters, who owns a small baking business.

To survey the hardest-hit parts of the island is to wimess devastation of surreal proportions. In Plymouth, what used to be the capital's vibrant streets today are vasi stretches of gray ash piled two meters high in some parts. Buildings and humes have been reduced to humed-out shells, some crushed by immense boulders. A phone booth in the center of town lay buried in the ash almost to its top. The smell of intense heat and fire still wafts through the air, and the only sign of life during a recent visit there was a stray dog. The island's one hospital. recently constructed to replace the one leveled by Hurricane Hugo seven years aco, was destroyed; its staff nuw operates oul of a school in a nearby town. The main seaport, in Plymouth, has been shut down, but an emergency jetty has been built in Lutle Bay in the north so that boats can rescue peoplc in case of a full-scale evacuation. Elsewhere on the island, the airport has been closed and there are no operating hotels.

An estimated 1,100 people have been placed in shelters, some of them in buildings that are nut completed and in substandard condition.

"They dumped us here like we are animals," said Dorothy Gordon, who is staying at a shelter at the Briggs Primary School with her 15-month-old baby and 12year-old son. "The cooking areas are not complete, so people can'i eat full meals, and neither are some of the bathrooms," government Montserrat spokesman Herman Sargeant said that the Brilish government plans to start building emergency housing in the north, and the Caribbean Community and Common Market intergovernmental organization has committed to constructing a village there for people displaced by the volcano crisis. Other infrastruclure projects, however, have been frozen by the British for lear

Even in the face of millions of starving children, many nations and people have problems donating relief funds to North Korea

By KEVIN SULLIVAN

The Jerusalem Post Wednesday, August 27, 1997

SEOUL, South Korea - The young mother sat on a North Korean riverbank with her infant son. She looked listless and sickly, hot and weak. Then she leaned over and vomited violently. When the convulsions stopped, she sat up and eradled ber baby in her arms before lying down on the rocky ground. Her baby sat over her motionless body, wailing and trying to rouse her.

This glimpse of life inside staunchly isolaoonist North Korea greeted millions of South Koreans when they turned on their television sets this summer. The mother's collapse was the opening sequence in an hour-long documentary on network television, a nearly non-stop montage showing North Koreans weakened or dying from bunger. The video footage, along with photographs of emaciated and siek children that have been printed in newspapers and magazines around the world, have had an impact Private donors in South Korea have donated $18 million in the last two months, more than triple the total they contributed in the last two years.

When the UN World Food Program issued an appeal for $45m. last month, most of that amount was raised in less than a week - a record. When the food program issued an appeal for just $8m. for North Korea in 1995, the world yawned and donacons fell $1 m. short of the goal.

As North Korea lets a few cameras inside its closed borders, the "stealth famine" is coming into focus, and aid agencies say they are no longer finding that the out-side world doubts the severity of North Korea's problem. But that's only half the battle: Even in the face of millions of starving children, many nations and people still bave trouble writing a cbeck for the Stalinist pariah state.

"We are beyond disputing whether this is a need; it's well established that the hunger problem is real," a US official said,

Then the North Koreans sell drugs to keep their embassies abroad afloat, they blow up airliners and they talk like jackasses. The incentive to give is reduced."

The historical animosities are hard to erase. A Korean War veteran sent an e-mail to The Washington Post's Tokyo bureau recently complaining that if the US sent even one grain of rice to North Korea, "it would be done on the

George Dalrymple theorized that the eroc's narrow shout and more obvious teeth give it a mean look, whereas the broad-headed alligator "seems to be smiling."

Soll, crocodiles do have a bad reputation. In folklore and legend from parts of Africa, Asia and Australia, where saltwater erocodiles can grow to 23 feet in leogth and weigh more than a ton, the largest reptiles on Earth often are used as symbols of cvil. And they have attacked people.

Crocs are said to have savaged almost 1,000 Japanese troops retreating through a Burmese swamp during World War U. A Peace Corps volunteer from Cornell University was eaten by a crocodile in Ethiopia in 1966. And 40 passengers on a sinking Indonesian ferryboat were devoured by crocs in 1976.

Two decades after being declared an endangered species, the American crocodile population is gaining ground.

"In terms of recovery, I think we can get the population back to what it was before we started altering the habitat, maybe 2,000 to 3,000 animals. I'm cautiously optimistic."

This year scientists have located more than 50 nests in Key Largo, Florida Bay and Biscayne Bay near Miami in a range that slowly is expanding up both coasts of the Florida peninsula. Adult crocodiles have been found as far oorth as Fort Lauderdale on the Atlantic coast and on Sanibel Island on the Gulf of Mexico, accordiog to

The country's declaration of independence in 1991, supported by 90 percent of its 51 million people, was the Soviet empire's death blow and marked the end of 300 years of rule from Moscow. Now the struggle is to reform and fully stabilize the economy.

Leave the bank alone

The governor of the Bank of Israel should look into the eyes of the thousands of workers who will join the circle of unemployed in the coming months, admonishes Manufacturers Association head Dan Propper, in response to the bank's decision to raise interesi rates by 0.7 percent. If anyone needs to do any soul-searching, however, it is Propper and others who are cynically waving the specter of unemployment for their own narrow interests, to the detriment of the economy as a whole.

The decision to raise interest rates, after dropping them over the past 14 months, is not a major surprise. Inflation rates for June and July were 1.2% and 1.0%, respectively, and the financial markets registered an expected annual inflation rate of about 10% - bumping the ceiling of the government's target range of 7% to 10%.

Bank officials, when accused of being blind to the anemic state of the economy, respond that the rate bike would bave been bigher if slow growth had not been taken into account. Even after this hike, real interest rates will be around 4% to 4.5%. This is lower than the 5% to 6% that the bank maintained in the last push to bring down inflation just a year ago.

If anything, it would be fairer to ask wby the bank dropped interest rates by 1.2% - nearly twice the amount of the current increase - just 10 weeks ago. That drop occurred the day after finance minister Dan Meridor resigned, ostensibly because of a widening of the "diagonal" the band in which the shekel exchange rate is allowed to fluctuate.

At the time, it was not entirely clear wby the change in the exchange rate mechanism would justify such a large drop in interest rates. True, the May inflation rate was an encouraging 0.5%, leading many to expect that interest rates would drop. And since politicians, industrialists, and the public at large enjoy the immediate windfall provided by cheaper credit, no one bothered to ask too many questions as to why the bank dropped its rates so precipitously.

With hindsight, it certainly looks as if the central bank moved too dramatically in June, forcing a large about-face this week. Now that it has reversed course, it would be helpful if we were spared the sanctimony of industrialists such as Propper, who wrap themselves in an anti-unemployment flag.

concentrate on their legitimate business interests, and do not try to pass themselves off as guardians of the economy in a hattle royal with the central hank. In any case, the idea that the way to fight unemployment is to let inflation run rampant is the worst sort of demagoguery. Business leaders should know better, and not give politicians like Labor and Social Affairs Minister Eli Yishai a patina of economic respectability for their equally misguided attacks against Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel.

Judging from the industrialists' rhetoric, one. might think that the Bank of Israel bad been taken over by an evil king who derived pleasure from inflicting maximum economic pain on the people, while they were Robin Hoods defending the simple folk. In fact, while both the Bank of Israel and the industrialists should share the goal of what is in the best long-term interest of the economy, the bank is the body that is acting on that interest.

The Bank of Israel is the only hody with both the power and the mandate to fight inflation. which is the most dangerous cancer that can strike a modern economy. Though the big businesses that Propper represents may think a bit of inflation will belp keep payrolls in line while the costs can be passed on to the consumer. most small businesses do not have that luxury. Nor does be seem to care about those workers whose salaries are not linked to inflation, and who therefore must stand by and watch as their paychecks get eaten away by the rise in the cost of living.

Given the critical nature of the bank's role, Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu was right at first when he resisted criticizing the rate increase directly, though later on be expressed a hope that next month rates would drop. A better stance would be to reiterate his support for the central bank's independence in general and the necessity of fighting inflation in particular.

In this vein, Netanyahu should quash all the talk about establishing a board of governors for the Bank of Israel, which would introduce outsiders to the decision-making process. Few things could be more damaging to Israel's economic standing in the world than a cloud over the central bank's independence. If the bank does not fight inflation, no one will; its inde-are to go surfing on Internet? If you do, you may come across the following "interesting" item: "The Terrorist's Handbonk," followed by more than 50 pages on how to make bombs. It tells you what ingredients you need, where to buy them and how to put them together in order to achieve the end-product, a terrorist bomb.

The scourge of terror

The product of a sick mind, you may say, and, of course you are quite right. The trouble is that there are at least 30 such sites on the Internet and, much more to the point, there are many such sick minds out there in the world, planning and perpetrating terrorist acts.

Terrorism is, without a doubt, one of the major scourges of the civilized world. It is a disease threatening the well-being of nations and societies. The shedding of innocent people's blood for the sake of a political objective, for a religious cause or for any reason whatsoever is a crime that lies at the very apex of everything that is evil and demented.

We are, quite naturally, focused on terrorist acts occurring in our own back yard, but violence for the sake of political causes, religion or nationalism, or because of bigoted beliefs, happens all the time.

In Algeria bundreds of villagers - old men, women, children, even babies - die borrible deaths; in Lahore worshipers in a mosque are gunned down: in Rwanda refugees are massacred because they are of the wrong tribe; in Egypt religious fanatics kill in the name of a religion that teaches against killing; in present equivocations with regard to those who foster terrorist acts will have been no less damaging to the Palestinian cause than the mistaken policy they followed when they backed Saddam Hussein during the Gulf War. Israel has been at the receiving end of more than its share of terrorist acts. Our intelligence and security services have, over the years, gained vast experience in dealing with terror organizations. This

Violence for the sake of political causes, religion or nationalism, or because of bigoted beliefs, happens all the time experience is now being put to use in a novel and commendable manner; an academic institute, called the International Institute for Counter-Terrorism, has been established at the Interdisciplinary Center for the Study of Business, Law and Technology, which was founded a few years ago by Professor Uriel Reichmann and which is now flourishing in its campus in Herzliya.

The reasoning behind the establishment of the institute combines academic study with the experihible for organizations fighting terrorism all over the world.

TERRORISM as a crime is in a class of its own. It has, however, some distant cousins that, in their own way, encourage terrorist acts. Racism, bigotry, hatred, the belief that whatever your own people do is right and whatever 'the others' do is wrong all come under that category People who adulate or make shrines for those who have killed innocent people are not much better than the terrorist who pulls the trigger or throws the bomb. The mass demonstrations in memory of the "Engineer" in Gaza, and the shrine for Baruch Goldstein in Kiryat Arba both must be considered abhorrent by every decent human being, whether Arah or Jew. Racism or religious bigotry inevitably lead to confrontation, violence and terrorism and, as such. must be fought with all the means at the disposal of a civilized society. The problem lies principally in the societies surrounding us. It is no accident that much of the violence occurring in the world today - in Algeria, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Egypt, Sudan, Lebanon - is taking place in countries in which Muslim fundamentalist fanaticism is the prime cause for the violence which has become so endemic in those societies. Compared to them Israel is a haven of peace and quiet.

Yet we have our own "distant cousins." With the oncoming opening of the new school year, now is a good time for our

Garry Kasparov vs. IBM's Deep Blue, A much more interesting battle between man and machine is playing out in today's media. In one corner is the Mars Pathfinder and its roving companion, Sojourner, which slowly is poking and prodding about on the Red Planet. And in the other, the Mir, Russia's accideni-prone space station, retreading the same orbit just above Earth every 92 minutes.

No contest. For better and (largely, I'm afraid) for worse. victory goes solidly to the humans, who handily have irounced Pathfinder on the evening news and on front pages. Remember Pathfinder? When it reached the Martian surface July 4, the intrepid spacecraft rightly was lauded as a triumph of a revitalized_space-exploration_program. For a few days, the world watched rapt as this brave hag of bolts picked its way across the Martian landscape, periodically stopping to hombard the rusted rocks with gamma rays to sniff out their composition. The official Pathfinder Wch site logged 80 million hits in one day.

Pathfinder's sensors are still monitoring the chilly Martian winds; Sojourner continues to explore the rocks given fanciful names like Yogi and Barnacle Bill by the scientists back home. But you can be forgiven if you don't know that, because the dispatches from Mars have been thoroughly displaced hy tales of the latest misadventures aboard Russia's space station.

The story really begins 11 years ago, when Mir entered orbit as one of the last great bits of Cold War propaganda. But those grand days are long past; Mir's raison d'etre has grown much more complicated after communism. Russian technological pride is still a prime motivation. For the United States, however, Mir is many other things: a cheap train-

However, just the other day, one of your readers stole my thunder.

Then this morning (August 21), Mr. Rogov offered another of his "expert" evaluations of a selection of French wines available in Israel (probably only in Herzliva Pituah). His euphoric but, unfortunately, repetitive evaluations of a selection French Burgundies and Bordeaux, using descriptive terms which he employs willy-nilly, in every one of his articles (e.g. "hints of hlackberries, currants, plums, dependence on foreign assistance, pineapple, cherries, not to forget

But my main objection to Mr. Rogov's pieces is not so much their pretentiousness, but rather their inappropriateness for most Israeli readers. At a time when we are struggling with rising unemployment, a growing portion of our population living below the poverty line, insufficient funds for education for everyone, and a need to reduce the balance of payments deficit, and decrease our the shekel could, and should, have been set free. Meantime, the country's foreign currency reserves have swollen to record levels of more than $18 hillion, which would suggest that the Treasury, at least, should be reassured that no sudden run on the reserves would bankrupt the country. On the other hand, Israel's inflation has been stuck stubbornly around 10%, whilst that of most developed economies has sunk ever lower - so presumably, the Bank of Israel is opposed to moving to full convertibility now.

Well, no, not exactly. In fact, not at all. The central bank is suddenly all gung ho to realize the prime minister's dream of blowing away the panoply of restraints that still surround the shekel. The Treasury, on the other hand, is distinctly unenthusiastic, and keeps mumbling about the dangers involved.

Remarkably enough - incredihly, almost - the Treasury may have a point. The Bank of Israel's Pauline conversion to an almost immediate move to full conven-ibility is highly suspicious. Maybe it just wants to keep the prime minister happy and/or hlunt the edge of his growing concern over the bank's interest rate policy. Perhaps the motive is short-term: to generate additional sources of demand for foreign currency from within Israel (for overseas investments, for example), thereby offsetting the ongoing inflow of foreign currency which has been pushing the shekel's value up and driving exporters mad (and local industry towards hankruptcy, which is worse).

Whatever the central bank's motive, the result is that Israelis are going to be granted much greater freedom of action vis-avis foreign currency trading and investment.

This is a milestone for the economy as a whole, and for the financial sector in particular: The opportunity of diverting domestic savings overseas rewrites the script for Israeli financial institutions. However, since they have failed to rehearse for this new and larger role, they are liable to find themselves upstaged by foreign rivals, who will quickly muscle in on the potentially significant amount of money available.

But in any longer view, that process of investment diversification and the more professional money management it demands. is a boon to the economy. The risk in deregulating the foreign exchange market is that of instability, perhaps horn of panic. But, since this can only be generated by popular disenchantment with the government's own policies, empowering savers and investors with the means to punish irresponsible policies is prohably at least as good a check and balance as hoping that ministers and bureaucrats get it right hy themselves.

First and foremost, people in space are more interesting than robots in space. Testy exchanges between Russian astronauts and imperious flight controllers on Earth qualify as solid melodrama; a communication breakdown that requires rebooting Pathfinder's computer does not.

In the current scheme, the Russians are our junior, somewhat backward partners and we can afford to laugh a little. Unfortunately, the smirks and sad shaking of the head tend to distract from the larger lessons of Pathfinder vs. Mir. From its inception, NASA has been keenly aware of the enormous publicrelations advantage that manned missions have over unmanned ones. But Mir's woes illustrate how easily that edge can tum against you. If there are mortalities, the Russian and the American space programs could be severely shaken.

Construction of the international space station is slated to begin next year. It will be far larger. more sophisticated and (one hopes) less trouble-prone than Mir, but it shares one crucial detail: It has no clearly defined mission other than 10 put humans into orbit around Earth. Although it gives the space shuttle someplace to go, the station itself merely flies around in lonely circles. Without a destination and a dream, a space station is little more than a man in a can.

It need not be that way. One of the most fundamental aspects of life is its relentless pursuit of new environmental niches to colonize. An overarching vision of human exploration of space would transform melodrama into high drama. The media triumph of the Mir saga can be more than a crude victory of voyeurism over intellectualism. It could serve as a reminder that the mind and the spirit need to expand logether.

why the process slowed and stopped. The official target was always full convertibility for the shekel, meaning that Israel's cur-rency would trade freely on world markets and would be accessible to one and all for any purpose (trade or investment either from Israel to abroad or the converse). However, the Treasury line was always that this must be done very slowly and carefully, because of the omnipresent danger of a run on the currency: If all the barriers were removed in one fell swoop, ton much money might surge overseas, triggering a crisis at home. The Bank of Israel, for its part, scoffed at this fear, regarding it as out-dated dogma. Any outflows could be stemmed by use of the interest-rate weapon, over which it has control. But the central bank had its own hug-bear. The shekel could not be fully convertible unui the Israeli "inflation environment" - meaning the kind of infla-tion rate extant here - was roughly on a par with that of Israel's main trading partners, namely

FAMILY MATTERS

First-day jitters Come of them cry. Some get weak in the knees. Others fly into fits of hysterics. Yes, the first day of school isn't easy on parents of youngsters starting kindergarten or first grade. There's the dreaded moment you say good-bye, your child clawing at your shoes, and the gnawing uncertainty about just what your child means when every time you ask him what he did at school today, he says: "Nothing."

But you don't have to dread your first close encounter with the school system. According to school psychologists Betty and Simcha Dershowitz, proper preparation, knowing your child and making yourself available are key elements to a smooth transition.

Preparation is everything - from making sure your child's school bag is packed the night before school starts to describing what school's going to be all about.

"It's important for parents to speak to their children beforehand about what it's going to be like, and about how to deal with certain situations. It's important for children to know who's going with them," says Betty, a school psychologist for the Beit Shemesh Municipality and mother of four, including a daughter who's entering third grade. "Make sure that one of you goes along with them on the first

But you should also talk about what they might be afraid of. Sometimes children who are starting school for the first time are afraid there are going to be older kids who might hurt them, and

Two school psychologists tell Aryeh Dean Cohen how parents can help their children - and themselves - through those first crucial days of school or kindergarten areo't sure what to do in such a case. They might be concerned about what will happen if school is too hard for them." Simcha, who is director of the Jordan Valley Regional Council's School Psychology Clinic and Developmental Unit, says separation anxiety is also a major problem, at least initially. "Some youngsters have problems adjusting to any new place," be explains, "and this is another separation, another new start." The first few days should be handled carefully, Betty says. "I believe more in staying with children and doing it gradually: leaving them for half an hour, and then coming back, and the next day leaving them a little longer." Most schools and kindergartens have shorter hours the first few days expressly for this reason.

Some kindergarteo and firstgrade teachers have a policy of shooing parents out the door, but agrees with this. Betty dis

"One shouldn't leave children when they're crying or upset, or tell them that you're not going, and then suddenly disappear. It's important to tell theat. I'm going, and then I'm coming back.' It's important to periodically go over the day's schedule with your chiki, says Simcha. "This is so you both have some structure in your minds. Go over what's going to be: you'll have recess at this hour; I'll pick you up at this time."

Betty recommends talking about first-day experiences with older siblings, who can allay some fears. There are also children's books on the subject that parents can read with their youngsters. She also suggests making sure you show your child where everything is in his or her new environment: the bathroom, where one can get a drink, etc.

ONCE YOU'VE made it past the first week, watch your children for some tell-tale signs of potential problems.

"If you see a very big change in their whole behavior or mood, if they stop eating, for example, then you should check it out," says Betty. There are more subtle signs as well. 'The child suddenly starts saying: 'My stomach hurts, my head hurts, I'm not feeling well.' The

However, he also cautions about reacting too soon. "First, there's a general leidown in a child after the first few days of school. There's a tremendous build-up beforehand, with everyone telling the child that he's a big kid now, etc. So keep in mind that this is a natural process in the child, and you have to give it some time. If things don't pick up again, it's worth looking into where body talks, and you have to pay attention to it," says Simcha.

the difficulties are." The first place to go in most schools is the school guidance counsclor (vo'etz or vo'etzer). While some parents believe in marching into the principal's office to take up any problem, the Dershowitzes both counsel going to the guidance counselor first, since he or she will in any case likely be involved in making whatever change is deemed neces-

However, parents should also realize that during the first week of school, principals and school staff often feel "like they're standing with their finger in the dike" as Simcha describes it, overwhelmed with requests for transfers for very petty reasons.

Sometimes a parent can help a child overcome problems without intervening personally.

"Most processes of adjustment take some time, even good things," says Simcha. "So a certain amount of stress and difficulty should be expected. But you can tell your child: 'I know you're a clever person, remember how well you did in kindergarten, etc. Well, this is a whole new game, and you have to find your place, and it's not easy, and will take time, and we're here to help you if you need us."

"Then you need to keep an eye on what kind of process is happening. In an adjustment cycle like that, the child will usually summon up his strengths and try to adjust, and in most cases, he'll succeed." Intervening too soon, he says, sends the message that "I don't think you can do it.

Parents should also try to listen to their children talk about their school experiences, the Dershowitzes say.

"Begin by asking your child to describe his or her day to you," says Simcha, "Ask: What did you do today? Who did you meet? How's your teacher? Find opportunities to do things together to give the child a chance to talk. Try to spend extra time with the child the first week." As for the dreaded H word homework - the Dershowitzes say the amount of parental involvement.

depends on your child. "If a child needs help or asks for help, you should give a reasonable amount, own," says Betty. Simcha warns it's important to avoid having homework become a new, problematic element in the parent-child relationship.

"If the relationship is getting complicated, it's quite possible that there is something about the interactions between [parent and child] which is not conducive to good work, or some objective difficulty that hasn't been diagnosed yet," he says. "It's important to find out what that diffi-

There are also children who use homework as "a way of catching a purcot's attention," says Betty. Stretching their homework out all night ensures they have your attention, she says. Instead, try making sure they get attention in other ways.

IT'S ALSO important for children to realize that even if they have difficulty in school, they're still okay.

"It's important for a parent to support them and tell them that whatever they manage, it's okay, or find ways to deal with not managing," says Betty.

Simcha suggests talking to your children about your own school days, if they were problematic, explain that those same problems are not necessarily going to happen to your children. Ultimately, parents who feel comfortable about their child's first days in school will convey that feeling to their children. "I think children can sense what's going on inside their parents, whether their parents are letting them grow op and go on," says

Betty. "Sometimes we have cases where parents want to keep their children behind another year in kindergarten, because the parent isn't ready to let the child grow up into that stage.

At least at the beginning, be home when your kids come home so you can hear how their days were, she advises. But most of all: "Take a deep breath and let the child fly," she says. Let him or her feel like they're going to succeed, and it's going to be a positive experience.'

Don't have children when they're crying or upset. Say 'I'm going - and then I'm coming back.' (R. Finder)

Tow To Talk So Kids Will Listen and Listen So Kids Will Tak is one of my favorite books on child-rearing.

It's fun to read, practical and, if you can apply its principles, extremely helpful to both parents and children.

The book was writteo by Adele Faber and Elzine Mazlish, who attended Dr. Chaim Ginott's parenting workshops for five years. Gmott, a noted child psychologist, was the author of the best-selling Between Paren: and Child (published in 1956) and stressed good communication as the key to solving child-rearing problems. Faber and Mazlish tell about their experience in Ginott's workshops in their first book, Liberated Parents, Liberated Children, which is also a very interesting read. In How To Talk, the authors go a step further and very concretely describe how we parents can change our behavior so that our kids will change meirs. Each chapter ends with a summarizing cartoon and a list that can be posted on the fridge for a quick reminder.

Here are some tips from the book When responding to a child's dis-

Instead of asking questions or giving advice ("Somebody stole my new red pencill"."Are you sure you didn't lose it?" or "What do you expect when you leave things lying around?"), acknowledge your child's feeling with a simple word such as "Oh," or "I see." This gives your child the space to figure out the problem for herself.

Instead of denying his feelings, name them. Your child comes op to you crying and says, "My hamster died." Instead of saying, "Don't cry, we'll get you another one," try saying something like "Losing a pet can hurt." Your child then feels

When you want to engage your child's cooperation:

Instead of blaming or commanding, describe the problem. Instead of "Why do you always leave your wet towel on my bed?" try "The towel on my bed is getting my sheets wet." Instead of "Get off the phone this instant!" try "Talia, I need to make a phone call now."

Instead of accusing or insulting, give information. Rather than saving "I told you a hundred times not to leave the milk out!" try "Milk gets spoiled when it's oot in the refrigerator," Rather than "It would never occur to you to help me with were set for dinner now." Instead of telling your child what's wrong with him, describe your own feel-ings. Rather than, "You are rude! You always interrupt," try "I feel so frustrated wheo I start to say something and can't finish." Alternatives to punishment Your child is acting wild in the supermarket. He's running down the aisles, grabbing food. You know the scene. Instead of threatening ("If you run down the aisle again. I won't buy you a cookie" or taking away a privilege "You're acting like a wild animal! No TV for you tonight," try one or more of the following: Point out a way to be helpful. "It would be helpful if you picked out three hig lemons for us." Express strong disapproval: "I don't like what's going on! It's dis-turbing to shoppers when children run in the aisles." Give a choice, "Leor, no running. Here are your choices: You can walk or you can sit in the cart. You decide," And if he keeps running, pick him up and say, "I see you decided to sit in the cart.

Let the child experience the con-sequences of his behavior without lecturing or moralizing. Keep your tone and expression friendly. Here's an imaginary conversation that takes place the day after the supermarket incideot: "Mommy, where are you going?"

"Shopping." "I want to go too." "Not today." "Why not?" "You tell me why." "Because I ran around in the store?" "You guessed it." "I'm sorry. Give me another chance!" "There'll be plenty of other chances. Today, I'm going by myself."

These examples and many others in the book are not meant to be scripts bui illustrations of a different way of doing things. Don't get overwhelmed by trying to do it all at once.

Choose one area or skill --- such as acknowledging your child's feelings --- and go with it for a week. See what happens. And if you'd like to share the results, please write and let us know!

HEADS 'N' TAILS

By BATSHEVA MINK and DAVID BRAUNER

If a committee had designed the camel and worked overtime, what would it have come up with in the plant kingdom? It would have to be a plant that's exotic, colorful, easy to care for, and one rarely troubled by pests and diseases. In short, it's a bromeliad.

The bromeliads, named after Swedish botanist Olaf Bromel (1639-1705), number about 2,000 species, and more are being discov-ered every year. Among the members of this versatile family are the pineapple, the ubiquitous tree-growing Spanish moss (Spaniard's beard), and the giant puya plant of the Andes Mountains, which reaches 12 meters high. All bromeliads, with the exception of West African Pitcaimia members. are native to the Americas. In the wild, they grow happily in deserts and rain forests, between sea level and lain lotest, between sea level and abitudes of over 4,000 m. Many species, such as orchids, grow on high tree branches. Unlike orchids, bromeliads are much better adapted to growing in our homes. The bromeliad family, generally distinguished by a rosette of spiny leaves and a flowering spike or stemmed flower head, divides into three groups. The epiphytes grow on trees, dry cliffs, and even telephone lines. Also known as "air plants," they are not parasites and therefore derive no sustenance from their

The terrestrials grow on the ground. They are generally low-growing with no distinct stem, and often have showy flowers and decorative, leatherlike, saw-edged leaves. The third group are the "rock dwellers," or saxicolous plants. Like the terrestrials, spiny leaves radiate from a central point which forms a

"vase" to hold rainwater. In nature, the vase is a home to animal life from protozoa to frogs. Malarial mosquitoes also commonly breed in the plant water. Here are some gorgeous bromeliads you might want to grow,

The urn plant (Aechmea fascian) has very handsome, narrow silverand-green-banded leaves and a bright, rose-pink, cone-shaped flower head that can last up to five months.

Queen's tears (Billbergia nutans) is an unusual terrestrial with grasslike silvery green leaves and drooping pink flower heads. It is very easy to grow, even in the garden, provided some of the harsh sun-light is filtered out by trees and large plants. The bl

The blushing bromeliad (Neoregelia carolinae tricolor) features a splash of outer green leaves censered with yellow or white, and inner leaves painted pinkish-red. The flower head, which stays inside the leafy rosette, is bright red with a violet core.

The pinéapple (Ananas comosus) is another terrestrial grown primarily for its famous fruit. They may only be raised in warmer regions like the Jordan Valley and Coastal Plain, where winter temperatures do not go below 13°C.

The earth star, or starfish plant (Cryptanthus), makes an excellent leafy house plant. The leaves are crinkled and often mottled or striped and come in a wide array of colors including rose, silver, green, chartreuse, gray, copper, white and red, or a combination of these.

The orange star (Guzmania berteroniana) is a tall plant with a brilliant red flower head and yellow flower center. The sword-shaped leaves are light green or wine red. All Guzmanias are epiphytes and flower in spring or winter.

Caring for your bromeliads: Water: Keep the watering can covered. Distilled or bottled water is recommended. The compost only has to be kept moist because these plants have undeveloped root sys-

Nourishment: Pour a liquid feed at half-strength into the watering can once a month when the plant is in active growth.

Soil: Bromeliads prefer a free-draining mixture of peat moss, ground charcoal, and leaf mold, if available.

Light Situate the plants in full light but avoid direct sunlight. The suffer and stouter the leaves, the more light and water deficit the plant can polerate.

Pests and Disease: If troubled by scale insects or mealy bugs, spray the plant with an insecticide or apply rubbing alcohol with a cotton swab. Bromeliads are easily propagated after flowering when the central rosene has died and offsets, or side shoots, continue to grow. When the offsets are about 15 cm. high, they can be detached from the parent plant and potted. Small clay pots and temperatures between 21-27°C are recommended. The plant crown must not be buried, otherwise it will rot. Once established, the plants can be moved to lighter, cooler conditions recently read a book in which the author gave all sorts of advice about how to teach your cat to behave. I read it with interest but also much amusement, because half a century of cat keeping has convinced me that Nobel lanreate Nikolas Tinbergen, the zoologist and animal behaviorist, was so right when he said, "Don't tell me what cats will or will not do." answer is that while we have no accurate way of estimating animal intelligence, it seems to me, and to most people who are well acquainted with both species, that cats are just as intelligent as dogs. They're simply different. Both species live in close proximity to humans, but they are essentially very different animals. To understand this, we must take a look at their most basic, natural behavioral patterns because Kipling's phrase "the cat that walks alone" is very accurate. Like all solitary animals, cats are accustomed to deciding for themselves. They have no instinctive behavioral pattern that makes them obedient to other cats or to humans. This is why all our most easily domesticated animals are ones that live in packs or herds and adhere instinctively to the rules of herd or pack behavior. This adherence to pack discipline. After all, they've already found the one responsible for herding insinct in dogs and another for attention span. So it really has nothing to do with the basic intelligence of the animal. Each simply displays this intelligence in different ways. And when it comes to the raw intelligence needed for survival, it seems that the cat is even better endowed than the dog.

But a cat is not a dog, and it is doubtful that you can teach it many 1. ¹. 1. K. H. H.

This doesn't mean that cats cannot learn; they simply learn the things they choose to learn. After several years of trying to get my favorise cat to sleep at the foot of the bed and not curl around my shoulder and play with my hair, I finally succeeded. She didn't like being shoved away. so she learned. She learned to stay at the foot of the bed - until she was sure I was sound asleep. After sharp increase in interest rates: PM may support proposal to limit Frenkel's power

By JAY BUSHINSKY and Jerusalem Post Staff

TOKYO - Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu may be coming to support a proposal for the establishment of a board of governors at the Bank of Israel, sources in his entourage here said yesterday.

However, the premier avoided openly confronting bank governor Jacob Frenkel. following the latter's decision Monday to raise interest rates by a bigher-than-expected 70 basis points.

The board-of-governors proposal, which has been circulating in various forms for

Under today's system, the governor decides monetary policy as the superior partner in a group of directors, all of whom are his per-sonal appointees. The proposals suggest adding various external figures to the decision-making process, ranging from economists to industrialists. "I am not angry at the governor," said Netanyahu, "I am waiting to see what the decision will be next month, It's not something you can judge based on one incident." The premier did, however, concede that about two years, is aimed at limiting the governor's power to set monetary policy. "in order to bring about economic growth, one must generally see to it that interest rates don't go higher than is necessary in order to meet inflation targets.

Netanyahu had been a staunch supported of Frenkel's tight monetary policies - a stance which played a role in his parting company with former finance minister Dan Meridor in June.

Since then, however, the economic slow-down has worsened, with first-half unemployment climbing to 7.6% and growth unmeting to 2%, while inflation stubbornly hovers just above 10%.

"I will be happy if the inflation rate responds, so we will be able to lower the interest rate," said Netanyahu, Finance Minister Yaakov Necman, who has joioed Netanyabu for his trip to the Far East, added that the government "sets its economic policy on August 13th, and one month does not determine a trend. There has to be a context of several months.

Frenkel's surprising decision Monday followed two relatively sharp increases in the Consumer Price Index, which rose 1% for July and by 1.1% in Junc.

Computer giants 'boot up' lobbying, political contributions

By HEATHER FLEMING

WASHINGTON, (Bloomberg) ---- The computer industry, once a small player on the Washington political scene, is greatly increas-ing its contributions to political candidates as the number of issues it faces on Capitol Hill grows. In the 1995-96 election cycle, the computer industry gave $7.3 million to political action committees, to the major political parties and to federal candidates, according to a study by the Center for Responsive Politics, a nonparti-san group that analyses campaign spending and the influence of money on politics. Computer industry donations in the 1995-96 clection cycle were 52% higher than in the last presidential elec-tion cycle in 1991-92.

tributions, the iodustry spent $19.9 million on lobbying expenses in 1996, the study said. International Business Machines spent the most on lobbying, $4.9 million, followed by Texas Instruments; $3.6 million, Electronic Data Systems., $1.8 million; Microsoft, $1.1 million; and Netscape Communications, $960,000.

"IBM does not contribute to any campaigns," but it does spend money on lobhying, said spokesman Fred McNeese. ٠We wanted our voice heard."

One of the most contentious issues before Congress this year is export controls on hard-to-break computer encryption codes. The Clinton administration, citing national security, wants the industry to provide access to a decoding device. The industry says foreign governments don't impose such restrictions, putting U.S. compa-nies at a competitive disadvantage. Several hills are moving through both the House and Senate that would relax the export controls.

Another controversial measure is the World Intellectual Property Organization treaty on copyright protection for the Internet. Proposed legislation includes a provision that forbids the manufacture of most devices designed to circumvent encryption technology. Computer hardware companies say they're concerned this Idan's Millenium Bug cure costs Leumi $13m.

By JENNIFER FRIEDLIN

Idan Software Industries of Herzliya has been awarded a $13 million contract to provide Bank Leumi with its cure for the Millenninm Bug, a glitch that could cause major computer problems

The industry is also backing legislation that would prohibit taxes on Internet commerce. It says taxation would stifle development of new technologies.

But the ministry says the Barak and Golden Lines consortia knew all the conditions when applying to the tender. The market should soon stabilize, the ministry adds, and the volume of calls has grown to benefit all three providers.

AT&T, Westinghouse officials here next month

By JENNIFER FRIEDLIN

Senior executives from AT&T and CBS Westinghouse will be part of a delegation arriving in Israel on September 7 for a two-day visit, said Edgar Fulton, commercial counselor at the US Embassy in Tel Aviv.

Representatives from ITDN Sunwise Technologies, GE Medical and CMS Energy will also be among the visitors, who will be lead by Judith Barnett, the US Commerce Department's deputy assistant secre-tary for Africa and the Near East.

While in Israel, the delegates will meet with Communications Minister Limor Livnat, Minister of Industry and Trade Natan Sharansky and several undisclosed Israeli companies. CBS Westinghouse is expected to explore participating in a bid to establish a third television network.

The two-fold purpose of the trip is to increase US exports to Israel and to promote business relationships between Israel and other Arab countries, Fulton said.

"We see this visit as very, very significant because we are going to try to establish regional trade activities regardless of political ups and downs," he said.

After leaving Israel, the delegation will continue to Morocco and Tunisia. All the firms participating in the tour have expressed an interest in doing business in the Israeli and Arab markets, said Fuhon. "We have chosen companies that consider the Middle East a single region," the commercial counselor said

Stocks in Tel Aviv dropped after the Bank of Israel said it will raise the rate at which it lends to bank a higher-than-expected 0.7 percentage point, to 13.4 percent. The central bank made the announcement after the exchange closed for the day on Monday, Declining shares included Koor, Israel's largest publicly traded industrial company, which fell 1% after Claridge Israel, an investor in the company, denied a news report that it's pushing for a new suategic plan for Koor. Koor's American depositary receipts were down 1/8 at 21 1/4 in early trading yesterday. The Maof Index of 25 issues fell 0.59% to 295.68 and the Mishtanim Index of 100 issues fell 0.67% to 287.71. The general bond index fell 0.2%. "An increase in interest rates was expected - but the degree of the increase was a surprise," said Yoram Sirkis, head of capital markets research at First International Bank Even so, said Sirkis, of Israel.

stock "declines were relatively limited, as people see the increase as a one-time event. People are expecting lower consumer price index increase es in the coming months, and lower rates sometime in the future."

We're seeing buying on the dips - people were too pessimistic and oversold auto shares," Yamauchi said.

Europe

LiK stocks fell for a second se sion, reflecting losses by their European counterparts, amid concem German interest rates could soon rise.

British Telecommuoicatious

Pic led losses after agreeing not to withdraw its takeover proposal for MCI Communications Inc., regardless of any further surprises in the US company's fortunes.

Banks were one of the largest decliniog sectors, underscoring uneasiness over interest rates.

The FTSE 100 Index fell 14.8 points to 4886.3, recovering from an earlier loss of 49.2 points. The index is down 3.9% since hitting an all-time high of 5095.3 earlier this month.

"We're nervous but not anxious" about the outlook for interest rates in Europe, said John Hayes, deputy head of research at Commercial Union Assel Management which manages 6 billion pounds ($9.7 billion) in UK equities.

"We don't foresee any major crash - so we're telling our managers to stay oght." The broader FT-SE 250 Index of mid-sized companies dropped 8.7 points to 4650 and the FT-SE 350, a combination of the other two, fell 6.6 to 2359.2

"We are overweight in some of the key sectors like banks and pharmaceuticals which have taken a bit of a hammering today, but we don't see any reason to change," said Hayes.

Wall Street NEW YORK (Reuters) - Bluechip stocks closed lower for the fourth straight session yesterday as the market was again stuck in a corrective mode, and investors were discouraged by a weakening dollar.

Based on early and unofficial data, the Dow Jones industrial average ended down 77.35 points, or nearly 1 percent, at 7,782.22.

On the broader market, declining issues led advances by a small margin on modest volume of 451 million shares on the New York Stock Exchange. Investors found few reasons to take major positions in the choppy market.

In order for some enthusiasm. the market needs either a constructive news event or it has to go to low enough levels that it begins to look attractive, and we are not there yet," said Joseph Barthel, chief investment strategist at Fahnestock & Co. Smaller stocks, however, continued to find some buyers. The Russell 2000 rose 0.22 of a point to 418.31. In New York trading, the dollar fell to 1.7975 German marks from 1.8196 marks in late dealings on Monday, weighed down by speculation that the German central bank would eventually have to raise interest rates.

Shekel appreciates sharply on rate rise

The shekel appreciated yester-day by a sharp 0.43% against the dollar following the decision of the Bank of Israel to raise its key lending rate for September by 0.7 of a percentage point. Dealers said that the market was also influenced by the expiry of the shekel-dollar options for Aogust yesterday and the slide of the US currency against the mark.

Analysts said that the general circumstances surrounding the central bank's monetary policy and the government's response to the business sector's attempts at eroding Governor Jacob Frenkel's clout, make it difficult to predict the market's direction in the coming days. In London, the dollar tumbled below 1.80 marks for the first time in a mooth amid expectatioos German interest rates are poised to rise soon to curb inflation. The dollar erased the brief gains it made after the Bundesbank kept its securities repurchase rate at its record low of 3.0% for another week. The US currency extended Monday's one-pfennig drop after figures showed consumer-price inflation io Western Germany was 2.3% in the six months to mid-August, fueling speculation the Bundesbank will lift rates to curb inflation. A rise could make mark-denominated deposits more attractive.

"People are thinking it's only a question of when, and oot if," said Michael Burke, an econoat Citibank. mist "The Bundesbank wants it like that and they seem to be getting their Eveo though the Bundesbank didn't act today, the CPI figures suggest that's not the end of the story," said Brian Venables, an analyst at ABN Amro Hoare Govent in Amsterdam. "The interest-rate climate in Germany is deteriorating."

The dollar extended its slide when stop-loss orders to sell the US currency were triggered as it fell through 1.8150 marks and 1.8120, said Gerry Celaya, an analyst at American Express Bank.

A report that industrial production rose a revised 2.9% in June from a year earlier, up from a previous estimate of a 1.4% rise, helped fuel rate-increase specula-

"With burgeooing industrial production, a lot of people are betting they will raise rates next time around," said Albert Wolfram, a currency trader at WGZ Bank in Frankfurt.

Boodesbank officials bave warned in the past few weeks that inflation could accelerate, That's because the dollar rose to an eight-year high of 1.8905 marks on August 6, op more than 20% from the beginning of this year. A weak mark raises the cost of imports.

A report Friday that German import prices rose a larger-thanexpected 0.6% in July from June and by 4.2% from a year ago sent the dollar tumbling three pfennigs on concern the Bundesbank was ready for a tightening.

The overnight rate, the discount rate, is at a record low 0.5%. By Federal comparison, the Reserve's target rate for overnight loans is 5.5%.

Still, concern a weaker yen will boost Japan's trade surplus is putting a cap on any dollar gains. A widening surplus puts more dollars in the hands of Japanese exporters to sell for yen when they briog profits home.

Minor complications

In spite of a host of bank restrictions, you can save for your child's future

By NEIL COHEN

ast weekend a close friend explained to me that there was an article that I had to write. I am accustomed to being told of articles I have to read, but not too many that I need to write. In any case, I am pleased to illuminate on this important subject: investing for childreo.

I well remember my late father helping me to open my first National Savings account at the post office when I was still a little boy. There was a feeling of wealth, importance and responsibility, even though there were only a few pounds in the account.

But for local youth, there are a variety of obstacles standing in the way of these valuable lessons. Upon calling around to the the banks to research local investing options, I learned that children (under the age of 18), as dictated by the Bank of Israel, are not allowed to have bank accounts. The main reason being that minors cannot be parties to a legal contract, and most aspects of a bank account involve a contractual legal relationship.

And while pareots can open savings plans for their children, even here restrictions apply, and there are unnecessary and unfair complications and limitations. In my search for the truth and the options. I called four of the five higgest hanks. One never got back to me, most likely because they didn't have anything to offer, two sent me listings of the various savings accouots they offer with no special reference to children, the inference being that they doo't offer anything special.

charges does the insurer

(and his agent) deduct? How much does the insurance really cost for what level of coverage

Having established that children can't enjoy the experience of having a hank account, can we at least come to some sort of conclusion about how best to save for their long-term future (education, wedding, apartment, etc.)? My gut feeling is that tailor-made insurance policies of the sort described above are typically very expensive and deliver mediocre returns. Bank savings plans are a cheap, low-risk, but at best moderate, return option (though probably as good as anything immediately available to the average saver in this country). In general, my answer to the "how best" question is "aggressively." In the US or the the local market or suck to savings plans.

UK, where there are fairly sophisticated markets with lots of quality blue-chip companies, fast-growing smaller companies and mutual funds with long-term track records of generating above average value for their shareholders, I would have no hesitation in building portfolios based 100 percent on stocks.

There is no reason why the same would not be the case for someone in this country, other than that foreign currency and tax regulations make the strategy I would adopt tax-inefficient and potentially something of a headache bureaucratically. I might just put 20% of the money I planned to save into the local market, but spread over four or five carctully selected companies. I might put 20% into a really good US mutual tund - probably a value fund. The rest I would spread around the world's emerging markets - probably via individual country mutual funds (rather than pooled emerging markets funds)

The fact of the matter is that while the US. Europe and Israel may continue to grow, in is some of the world's poorer and less developed economies that will grow fastesi over the next 10 or 20 years. So a well run China Fund and an India Fund would be my first picks. Then you can take your pick between Brazil, Russia and Taiwan.

There may be humps along the way, but the ride is likely to be a profitable one. There are ways one can structure such plans for maximum tax efficiency (consult your accountant) if you are entitled to a foreign- currency exemption. Otherwise you'll either have to take the tax consequences, hope for the best in

The flip-side of coin collecting

By JON FRIEDMAN

NEW YORK - For coin collectors, these are the worst of times and best of times. With coin prices down 33 percent from 1989 highs, according to appraisers, collectors have seen the value of their collections plummet.

Depressed prices, however, are enabling collectors to obtain rare coins for a pittance compared with a decade ago. "This is a prime time to be buying coins," said Robert Weiss, owner of Old Pueblo Coin Exchaoge in Tucsoo, Arizona. Coin values bave been burt by declioing inflation and the ecooomy's stability.

"Like other collectible businesses, from 1991 to 1995, coins were affected by (declining) inflation pressures," said Harvey Stacks, the 69-year-old managing partner of Stacks, a New healthy US economy, is bringing hovers back to coins, lifting prices a hit. "Since 1995, we bave seen an acceleration of interest from buyers," Stacks said. "Prices have gone up 10 percent to 15% on the rare coins since theo."

With prices oear their lows and rebounding, it's an opportune time for collectors who are just getting started. Collectors say that $20 gold coins are among those that are in the greatest demand. The US government stopped minting them in 1933 when the market value of their metal rose to $35 each. "A gold piece with an original face value of $20 has risen in market value from $450 to $525 in the past year," said Stacks.

Coins need oeither to be old nor gold to be valuable - just rare. In 1995, for instance, the mint in Philadelphia issued pennies soared in value to $1,000 apiece "because they were so unusual," said Jim Richards, manager of Coins of the Realm in Rockville, Maryland. The value of the pennies declined to $30 each after it was discovered that as many as 600,000 of the coins went into circulation, Richards said.

American coin collectors are more interested in US coins than those of other nations and cultures. "Some ancient coins cao be obtained that are 2,000 years old and worth only about $10," said J.P. Martin, who assesses coins for the American Numismatics Association, a trade group for coin dealers and collectors in Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Unlike antique cars, coins don't get better with polishing and may actually lose value from a cleaning. "They're worth more in their origioal state," said leave marks on it."

Coins must be handled with care. "Handle coins by the edges because oils in the skin can tar-nish them," Stacks said. Humidity, too, can devalue coins, he said, "because moisture could collect on the coin and attract dirt.

Conceding that there are some unscrupulous or simply illinformed members of their trade, dealers urge collectors to get a second opinion about coin values before making a purchase. Two weekly publications, Coin World and Numismatics News, contain price lists.

"Many times I've had to tell people that their investment of $25,000 for a coin collection is now only worth $5,000 because they paid too much or bought the coins from a company that was not reputable," said Weiss of Old Pueblo Coin Exchange. "They Dealers say collectors will pay buying from dealers, shops and at conventions.

Coin auctions are widely considered the best places to get the highest prices when selling collections. Sellers can also advertise coins in publications, rent space at a show or convention or sell directly to a dealer. Because dealers are going to pay less for a coin than what they believe they can sell it for, and auctions, coin shows and conventions entail other costs, a collection may have to appreciate significantly from its acquisition cost for a seller to make a profit.

And then there are always stories such as this one: At an auction in 1981, Martin, of Colorado Springs, saw a 1934 San Francisco-minted silver dollar. He knew Depression-era coios were rare and therefore valuable; however, no one else at the auction seems ta know bought the coin for $12. Three months later, he sold it for $3,200, (Bloomberg)

After being dropped from fourth to seventh in the 1996 draw, which ignored his place in the rankings, Kafelnikov went home to Russia rather than play the year's final Grand Slam tournament. Yesterday, in opening the second day of play at the new Arthur Ashe Stadium, the Russian put on display all the talents that made him the No. 3 seed this year, the same as his computer ranking. And when it was over, he was into the second round with a 6-2, 6-4, 7-6 (7-4) victory over Cristiano Caratti nf Italy. Martini Hingis, who is seeking her third Grand Slam tournament title of the year, easily captured her first-round match, crushing Tami Jones of the US, 6-0, 6-1 in 42 minutes. The 16-year-nld Hingis, ranked No. 1 in the world, won the Australian Open in Janoary and Wimbledon in July. She was joined in the winner's circle by French Open champion Iva Majoli, one of only twn players to beat Hingis this year. Seeded fourth, Majoli upended Catalina Cristea of Romania 6-3.

6-2. "I'm trying not to think about it," Majoli said of her French Open title. "It's like great; I won it. But you have a tournament each week. If yon just think, 'I won the French,' you don't concentrate on your career and everyone is going to beat you."

Shentals ride the waves Brothers Nir and Ran Shental in 2nd place in World Sailing Championships

By HEATHER CHAIT

Israel's Nir and Ran Shental are lying in second place after three sails in the final rounds of the World Sailing Championships (470 division) in Tel Aviv yesterday.

The Shentals, ranked third in the world, finished their three sails yesterday in seventh, sixth and second spots. Ahead of the Israelis are the Russian entrants Dmitry Beryozkin and Yevgeny Bormatnov, while the Finnish team of Petri Leskinen and Kristian Heinila are in third place.

The world leaders Andreas Kosmatopoulos and Kostas Trigonis from Greece are stranded in ninth place.

In the consolation group, Israel's Gidi Kliger and Ehud Gal are in second position.

Among the women, the team of Anat Fabrikant and Shani Kedmi are in fourth position after six sails. Their individual results yesterday were four and seven from the two sails.

The Ukranian team of Vladelina Kratchun and Natalia Gapovonich retain the pole position, having won fnur of the six sails so far. This partnership won the bronze medal in Atlanta last year and have been European champions four times. In second place are Nicola Birkner and Wibke Buelle from Germany. All together, 12 sails will be held in the men's and women's competition.

Petah Tikva advance in UEFA Cup prelims

By DEREK FATTAL

Hapoel Petah Tikva cast aside their domestic blues and continued to blaze along the European trial with a deserved 1-0 home vicinry nver Denmark's Vejle Boldkhub in last night's UEFA 2nd preliminary round return leg tie.

The win came after a goaless draw in the Danish town of 50,000 inhabitants two weeks ago in the fust leg. The Petah Tikvan's now go into Friday's draw in Geneva for the first round proper of the competition thanks to a 32nd-minute own goal scored by Vejle central defend-er Kent Scholz. The luckless Scholz was attempting a desperate clearance off the line from a Motti Kakkon lob over goalkeeper Erik Boye, which struck the crossbar before rebounding into goal off Scholz's knee.

Nir Levin's game plan looked to be going right in the first half as the 'blues' continuously threatened in attack while their defense neutralized any counteroffensives from the Danes, Motti Kakkon had the first sniff of goal early on but was thwarted by the quick-witted Boye. Three clear chances then fell to fellow striker Manor Hassan who squandered each one in turn.

Just as the home support of over 6,000 fans was beginning in lose hope of seeing the ball land in the Danish net, Motti Kakkon raced onto a telling pass into the area by captain Benny Koschivilli and spun the ball over the advancing Boye. The ball hit the underside of the bar then bounced off Scholz of Hapoel Beersheba in the same for the decisive goal. stage of the competition two sea-

Fair play rewarded

LYON (AP) - England and Norway have maintained their extra teams in next season's UEFA Cap competition as a reward for fair play.

Sweden will lose a place while Finland will field two teams instead of one after replacing the Swedes in the Fair Play to three.

England finished top of UEFA's Fair Play league, which is based on the sportsmanship of teams in all European competitions.

England will again be able to field four teams in the 1998-99 competition, the same as this season, and Norway will again

After the trouncing England endured in the Ashes series, who could have believed such a fairytale ending would unfold in the sixth and final Test at the Oval. With the series already wrapped up, and without two strike bowlers, the Australians could have been excused for being a littie complacent. But the way they crumhled on Saturday chasing a modest 124 did little to enhance their reputation as the world's greatest side.

But credit where credit is due and no one deserves more than Phil Tufnell, the Middlesex spinner whose 11-wicket haul earned him the man-of-the-match. Tufnell is one of the great characters of the English game - a player who has never really lived up to his promise in the international arena, and who has been featured in both the front and back pages of the tabloids around allegations of misuse of certain substances and other peccadillos concerning his private life.

He comes over as a cheeky chappie, a cricket equivalent of Max Miller, never more so than when interviewed hy the media. After his first-innings haul of 7-64, Tufnell seemed in a hurry to get off the field rather than bask in the glory of the moment.

When his old Middlesex teammate Simon Hughes, now working for BBC Television, grabbed him for an interview, Tufnell was less than philosophical about his achievement. "I just want to put my feet up and enjoy a cup of tea and a cigarette," Tufnell said. One hopes that the high and mighty of the Sports Council were not listening as the national sporting hero of the moment was exiolling the virtues of smoking,

The soccer season is in full flow after the enforced break for World Cup qualifiers. When there is no action on the field, the press usually have their field day off it - enter Ian Wright. The Arsenal striker is two goals short of overhauling Cliff Bastin's scoring record of 178 goals for the club. Would he achieve it at Southampton, a club against which he had an excellent record? The hype was enormous, Wright's response was muted as Marc Overmars and Denis Bergkamp wrapped up the points for the Gunners.

Dalglish. Whatever the reality, to travel from Bogota to Newcastle and arrive just 10 minutes late is quite a feat.

One has to feel a little sympathy for Wales manager Bobhy Gould who saw his side beaten 6-4 hy Turkey in last week's World Cup qualifier. It was difficult to decipher whether this score represented a Davis Cup tennis contest or an international soccer match.

Gould, vilified in the press, does not look like he will be continuing too long in the joh, hut he certainly provided us with the quote of the week. Commenting on the standard of refereeing in Turkey, Gould said that the Belgium manager was watching the game, and told Gonld afterwards that he thought the referee "must have been allowed to sleep with all the prostitutes in Istanbul.

Now, Liverpool may have not started the season in their usual winning style, but do not rule them out - not if Saturday's performance at Blackhurn is anything to go hy. Coming off the back of a draw and a loss, Liverpool took the game to Blackburn and were unlucky oot to get all three points in a 1-1 draw. Liverpool's scorer was Michael Owen, yet another name for the future in a long line of home-grown taleot. Owen is just 17, but already he is being compared to Rohhie Fowler and Steve Macmanaman in terms of ability and temperament.

Liverpool's youth team is managed by former star Steve Heighway, one of the few players past and present to hold a university degree. Heighway's approach is to sift through the hundreds of talented youngsters in his soccercrazy city, and with Owen, he has found the top of the range. The way Owen took his goal for Liverpool at Blackburn was in the same class as Wright, or Ian Rush in his heyday, and the problem now for manager Roy Evans is whether to restore Fowler to the team when he is fit or

Meanwhile Bastin's 81-year-old widow Joan prepared herself for the inevitable with a cootroversial dig at Wright. "I wish the record were going to someone else. I don't have a very high opinioo of Ian Wright," she told the Observer newspaper.

Also hitting the headlines without kicking a ball was Newcastle's Colombian striker Faustino Asprilla who arrived 10 minutes late at St James' Park for the game against Aston Villa and was forced to watch from the stands.

According to Newcastle manager Kenny Dalglish, Asprilla had a valid excuse; he had been delayed getting out of Bogota after represcoting Colomhia in a World Cup qualifying match during the week. "He hired a car, got to Bogota, and found there was an air-traffic controllers strike. But he tried really hard to get here," explained

While the woman was instructed to lie on the floor, the pastor of the Miracle Center Church, his voice booming under the high, ram-shackle roof of metal and plastic sheeting, cried, "We ask the Lion of Judah to remove her pain and make her whole!" Suddenly, while large plastic collection bags were being passed around, instead of the traditional donation plate, the woman bounded up from the floor beaming, "miraculously"healed, Hallelujahs rang out from the amazed worshipers. Churches like these have become big businesses in Congo, until recently Zaire.

And the 8-year-old Miracle Center, whose credo would seem to be "the bolder the better," has become one of this ragged city's most prosperous operations.

Every Sunday, by the thousands, residents drawn by their hard luck flock here in their best clothing. And the frenzied services of the church seem planned to soothe people whose marriages are broken, who cannot find work, who suffer every kind of ill, particularly AIDS. The succor that the Miracle

Center offers is not of the traditional, spiritual kind: the promise of peace in a world beyond.

Instead, as the church's name suggests, it revolves around the idea. of immediate action by God.

And despite their modest means, the worshipers accept the church's in exploiting a marriage of deeply rooted Central African traditions and Western techniques. The former have to do with material sacrifice, spirit worship and magic, the latter with the driven corporate organization and hucksterism of the television evangelist. "The missionaries who came here sought to stifle the African thirst for the miracle," said the Rev. Ndoudoboni Essambela, a conventional Baptist pastor who, like many in the more traditional religious orders here, is critical of the new evangelical churches.

Many people will tell you that that has just left them unsatisfied." "Our churches have tended to focus on the afterlife, which is fine," Essambela said earlier this year. But in Zaire, there are so many real problems right here on earth. And when people are miserable they want nothing so much as to dream and have miracles." The first well-known Zairian evangelist, a Father Osborne, clandestinely preached that he could cure the sick and enrich the poor as long as 30 years ago. But religious experts here say evangelical churches like the Miracle Center spread with the loosening dictatorship of Mobutu Sese Seko, who was recently ousted. Until 1990, when civilian opponents obliged Mobutu to accept multiparty politics, Zaire tolerated the presence of only three Christian churches: the Roman Catholic Church, brought by Belgian colonizers: the Protestant churches that followed, and a charismatic indigeKimhanguist Church. About a quarter of Congo's 45 million people are Protestants, with as many as half of those belonging to evangelical churches.

The older churches were very much co-opted by the dictatorship, which protected their franchise, said the Rev. Pierre Massamba, a Catholic priest in the Matongue district of Kinshasa. "Once the restrictions came off there was a veritable explosion of new parishes and doctrines." In Congo, it is the tradi-tional churches, Roman Catholic or Protestant, that educate the young and care for the sick. But the more traditional churches do not offer what increasingly desperate congregations long for. In recent years, as life here has grown harder, the older houses of worship have been steadily losing ground to aggressive evangelical their COUSING

The new churches make no bones about not reinvesting in their communities the money they collect each week. "Our concern is the word of God," said an evangelical preacher who refused to be identinous sect known as the fied. "Once people have received the word of God they can have anything." Those who run the Miracle Center reject accusations that they are robbing the already vulnerable. But at the same time they are surprisingly open about the corporate nature of their church and the special advantages that persistent traditional African beliefs give them in their competition with longer-established denominations. We are not only a church, we are an enterprise," said Bompere Egide, a lay preacher and manager of the Miracle Center, who greets visitors in a fine shirt and tie in his air-conditioned office in a building behind the altar. "At the end of the month, I receive a salary for what 1 do." For Egide, the Miracle Center is plainly appealing to people on whom ancestral religious practices have left strong marks. The difference, he says, is that his church teaches faith in God, rather than in a panoply of spirits.

In our traditional culture you often have to make a sacrifice if you want to get results," he said. "It is the same here. The Bible says that God will materially aid those who give to Him. All we are teaching our flock is that if you want to reap you have to sow." For Essambela, the Baptist pastor --- who years ago, before being ordained, once attended evangelical services in hopes of a cure for hepatitis --- the distinction is not so clear.

The one thing they have right is that to combat this kind of thievery people need the word of God," he said. "Jesus speaks of miracles, but he never said anything about selling them." (New York Times)

Vietnam's Caodai of honor

In the world of conformist communist Vietnam, the once-banned Caodai religious sect is a splash of color with a zeal for the garish.

Adherents commune with the spirits of historical figures, including Joan of Arc, Victor Hugo, Lenin and, for more light-hearted seances, Charlie Chaplin. They look to the spirits of such people because of strong personality traits that can be models for others.

Secluded in southern Vietnam's Tay Ninh province, their main temple, decked out in blues, yellows and reds, borrows from religions around the globe in an effort to bridge the world of the living with the spirit world.

Founded in the 1920s, Caodaism is a hybrid of Buddhism, Taoism, Vietnamese Confucianism, spiritism, Christianity, Hinduism and Islam.

The result is a jumbled code of ethics and tenets that has attracted more than 3 million followers, despite the Vietnamese government's control of religion.

Caodai believers also practice priestly celibacy, vegetarianism and the worship of ancestors. The religion emphasizes morality and frowns on material luxuries, lust and deceit.

It's a blend of East and West. Saints include modern China's patriarch Sun Yat-Sen and Vietnam's first poet laureate, Nguyen Binh Khiem.

In early June, Caodai devotees got a hig boost when their religion received official sanction from the government, legitimizing its existence in the eyes of the communist leadership.

"We find the Caodai existence meets a legitimate spiritual demand of the people here," said Muoi Thuong, a spokesman for the govemment's Religious Affairs Committee in Tay Ninh.

"These people are religious followers, but they are also good citizens and patriots," Thuong said in a telephone interview from his office in Tay Ninh, 95 kilometers northwest of Ho Chi Minh City.

Established by Ngo Minh Chieu, a French-educated Vietnamese mystic, Caodaism once dominated Tay Ninh, controlling the religious and political affairs of the entire province

In 1975, when North Vietnamese troops overran US-backed South Vietnam, Caodaism was banned and the church's lands were confiscated. But behind the scenes, the religion lived on, with its seance rituals and prayer meetings. Today, Caodaism is practiced in about half of Vietnam's provinces. In Tay Ninh, about 40 percent of the province's 916,000 people are Caodai believers, and the number is expanding every year, said Thuong. (AP)

Battling Gulf War syndrome

Dritain's Labor government Brecently announced a new research program iuto the mysterious ailments suffered by many Gulf War veterans and promised to speed up assessments of their condition.

The announcement was a victory for ex-soldiers in their campaign for official recognition of "Gulf War Syndrome," which they link to preparations for the 1991 war to drive Iraqi forces out of Kuwait.

The government said it plans a £2.5 million (NIS 15 million) research program into the possible health effects of the combination of vaccines and tablets given to Gulf War troops to protect them against chemical and biological warfare, and against desert insects.

Veterans say the syndrome results from a "cocktail" of chemto troops

The government program will be supervised by an independent panel of experts, including a representative of the Gulf veterans, said Armed Forces Minister John Reid. We have a duty to discharge our responsibilities in respect of those who have served their country. I aim to see we do just that," said Reid, who was to meet veterans' representatives before announcing the move to parliament.

His fans put up a "Church of Joe" page on the Internet, which includes commandments, member testaments and information about J. Michael Straczynski. The church was founded to proclaim loyalty to Straczynski and the show he created, Babylon 5 (Family Channel, 11:25 tonight).

Alongside Xena, Worriar Princess, La Femme Nikita, The X-Files and other contemporary shows with offbeat attitudes, Babylon 5, which premiered in 1994, has attracted hard-core aficionados.

Straczynski, the show's creator and executive producer, has received fan mail from places as varied as the Vatican and the Pentagon. Babylon 5 has Web sites. bulletin boards and chat rooms. Fan clubs abound all over the world.

t the Venice Film Festival. movie buffs can attend spe-Cial screenings featuring one of the world's most industrious moviemakers: the Uoited Nations. More often associated with bureaucracy than creativity, the United Nations has quietly produced scores of acclaimed documentaries, animated and concert films over the years. Those lending their talent have iocluded director Roberto Rossellini and Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Hersey.

The films are a blend of information, artistic expression and, in some cases, a good dose of the UN spin on disarmament, the environment, human rights and other weighty topics. In the United States, the films usually are broadcast on public television stadons and in schools. Broadcasters in developing nations can show them for free. The United Nations even won an Academy Award, for the 1947 short documentary First Steps, about a disabled child learning to

Beersheba Sinfonietta promises dynamic season

By MICHAEL AJZENSTADT

Israel Sinfonietta ∃be Beersheba has regular ups and downs in its seasons. Some coocerts can be very exciting, as the one that opened the previous season, for example, while oo other occasions the orchestra can be much less inspiring. All in all, music director Uri Mayer manages to maintain a solid musical ensemble in the south of Israel which brings the joys of classical music to locales such as Arad. Dimona. Kiryat Gat and Ashkelon and to its very loyal audience in Beersheba while performing in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem as well. The coming Sinfonietta season, starting September 6, is the most dynamic the orchestra has presented in several years, artists-wise.

The season opens with ravishing pianist Christina Ortiz playing Beethoven's "Emperor" piano concerto and will feature conductors Yoav Talmi, Eri Klass and Arnold Katz, as well as soloists such as trumpet player Markus Stockhausen, violinist Pierre Amoyal, and young, up-and-coming Israelis such as Aviram Reicbart, Yevgeni Yehudin and Karen Tanenbaum in one major series of 10 classical music concerts and six light classics concerts focusing on the music of Mozart, Dvorak, Handel, Haydn, Strauss and Tchaikovsky.

The, Sinfonietta'a popular opera series features four miniconcert versions of operas, including Eugene Onegin and Don Giovanni without chorus, and with two or three singers performing the highlights of each opera.

Among the soloists in this upcoming series are Sharon Rostorf, Larisa Tatuev, Susanna Poretsky, Yevgeny Shapovalov, Felix Livshitz, Vladimir Braun, Dan Etinger and Yuri Kissin.

The major highlights of the coming season arc Yinam Leef's Faufares and Whispers for trumpet and orchestra, the Copland clarines concerto, Cimarosa's 11 maestro di Capella and others.

An altogether balanced season with some brilliant soloists and conductors who just night inspire the orchestra to become more than a solid ensemble and play music more vivaciously.

Justice Yaacov Kedmi was shown classified material obtained by Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani, who has been visiting Russia and Ukraine since last week.

Ben-Ari's anomey, Yoram Sheftel, whose former client John Demjanjuk was acquitted by the High Court after being convicted of war crimes, was critical of Kahalani's involvement in Ben-Ari's case.

"A minister who involves himself in seeking evidence in a police investigation turns the probe into a political investigation, which means that Ben-Ari should be released right now," Sheftel argued.

Sheftel asserted that the last time that a minister got involved in an investigation was then-prime minister Shimon Peres who brought the Trawniki Card to Israel from the former Soviet Union in the 1980s, to be used as evidence against Demjanjuk.

The card helped prosecutors get Demjanjuk convicted of being a death camp guard in Treblinka Death Camp in Poland during World War II. But Demjanjuk was acquitted in 1993 by the Supreme Court, who said be may have been a victim of mistaken identity.

Ben-Ari, jailed since May, has already speni 107 days behind bars, although he hasn't been indicted. He is suspected of bank fraud, abetting murder, and trying to influence politicians.

Kahalani in Ukraine fender bender

By Jerusalem Post Staff

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani was lighdy injured yesterday in a traffic accident in the Ukraine capital of Kiev. His spokesman, Rafi Levy, said the car carrying Kahalani and Ukraine's deputy interior minister collided with other vehicles in the convoy, as Kahalani was headed to a meeting with the Ukrainian interior minister. Kahalani was lightly scratched and didn't require any medical attention, Levy said. "The Ukrainians were so embarrassed by the accident that they couldn't stop apologizing," Levy said.

One squatter remains in custody on suspicion of drug possession, and will appear in court for a remand hearing tomorrow.

Judge Carmi Mosek refused a police request to remand four of the squatters on suspicion of weapons possession and of inciting the others to resist eviction. Police said the four had prepared firebombs, but the judge noted that no firebombs were found. Mosek retracted an earlier comment that the eviction may not have been legal because 30 days had passed since the squatters had occupied the apartments. After 30 days, a court order is required for eviction, and none was obtained. He noted later, however, that since the Jewish Agency had filed its complaint with-

Dozens of those evicted gathered at the Mevasseret local council offices yesterday to discuss their next moves. Several said they were considering breaking into the absorption center again, as they had nowhere else to

to remain in the flats.

Labor Mix Ophir Pines wrote to Deputy Housing Minister Meir Porush yesterday, asking that his ministry find living solutions for those who had been evicted, even if only in a hotel, so that children would have a place to return to after school. Housing Ministry spokesman Moshe Eilar replied that solutions had been found for some of the families, and that 28 others that were cligible for rent subsidies had been offered them. (Itim)

Yisrael Ba'aliya whip MK Roman Bronfman said he planned to meet the 13 of the rebellion's leaders when he visits the prison today. Four other ringleaders were already moved to Prison 4.

State Prosecutor Edna Arbel met yesterday with the IDF's chief prosecutor, Brig. Gen. Un Shoham, to discuss the validity of the agreement reached with the prisoners. They postponed drawing any conclusions pending further investigation of the rebellion. Some officials, notably the IDF's manpower head. Gen. Gideon Sheffer, are pressing the prosecutor's office not to honor the accord because it was drawn that helped bring a peaceful end to the Aug. 11 rebellion. Sarid said that while it was infuriating to make deals with criminals, and awkward to have to carry out what was promised, the army up under duress. Guidelines to be set for school on-line services

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN

The increasing use of computers in the schools has led the Education Ministry to set up a panel to establish ethical principles and guidelines for use of the Internet and data bases in the schools.

According to a ministry spokesman, the panel will be headed by a judge-It will deal with such matters as privacy; protection of data, and exposure to racist or pornographic Web sites, according to Yaffa Vigodsky, director of the ministry's Science and Technology Administration.

The formulation and publication of a code of ethics will give pupils the tools for more critical and intelligent use of the unlimited information available on the various lines of communication," she explained.
